

Secretary Herbert Hoover Visits Barnegat Light

Accompanied by Senator Frelinghuysen and Several Ocean County Men.

Secretary Herbert Hoover and Senator Jos. S. Frelinghuysen came quietly into Barnegat last Sunday and were met by Era Parker and William H. Fischer. They went across the bay to visit the Barnegat Light house and with Keeper Clarence Cramer, they went over the ground and Mr. Hoover saw the conditions as they now exist and although he did not commit himself, it is thought that he will give his support in saving this historic light.

It may now be said Secretary Hoover has the final say as to the fate of Barnegat Light house, at least as to whether any emergency money will be spent there this summer to protect it against the storms of next winter. Application has been made to him by Congressman Appleby, following a favorable report from Commissioner Putnam of the Lighthouse Bureau, after his visit to Barnegat Light with his assistant, Mr. Conway, and Congressman Appleby, June 13. Congressman Appleby is authority for the statement that after he succeeded in getting Commissioners Putnam and Conway to visit Barnegat Light, the Commissioner has now made a favorable report, recommending that the lighthouse be retained in the service as it now stands and that steps be taken for its proper preservation. Congressman Appleby has a bill in Congress to appropriate $30,000 for this purpose, but this bill cannot be put through in time for this summer's work. There is an appropriation of four millions to the Lighthouse Service, and part of this is an emergency fund. Congressman Appleby and Senator Frelinghuysen are urging Secretary Hoover to allot a part of this fund to save old Barnegat Light. In a recent conference the secretary promised them he would look into the matter carefully and give them an early decision.

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT AT WEST CREEK SATURDAY

Harry Fink of 624 Wolf Street, Philadelphia, was seriously injured Saturday afternoon when his auto which he was driving, hit a tree. Mr. Fink, with a party had been fishing and had several crabs in a basket. One of the crabs got out and he attempted to get it back with one hand while driving with the other. The crab got hold of his finger and he promptly forgot about the auto, resulting in a smash-up. Mr. Fink was taken to the home of N. E. Kelley and was treated by Dr. Herbert Willis, later he was sent to the Atlantic City hospital. He was badly cut about the face and head and a probable fracture of the right leg.

BEACH HAVEN

According to report many lots are being sold at Beach Haven Heights, which is a new tract of land South of the town. Mrs. Belle Bartlett of Mount Holly, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Mary Blackman. Lewis Broome and Miss Evelyn Parker were united in marriage on Friday evening last. A child was injured on Sunday, on South street, while trying to step from a moving automobile. How seriously, is not known. Cottages continue to be in demand and there are only a few left. Miss Roberta Matthews and Miss Helen Patton of Ocean Grove gave very able service in the M. E. Church on Sunday. Arthur King spent Sunday with his family. Mr. and Mrs. William Butler were in town the latter part of the week. Mrs. L. M. Robinson and family of Ship Bottom, picnicked in town on Monday. (Continued on last page)

Clementon Man Drowned in Tuckerton Bay

Sinks Near Shore When Boat Turns Over. Could not Swim.

Samuel Pino, nineteen, son of Frank Pino, a restaurant proprietor at Clementon, was drowned in Tuckerton Bay last Thursday morning. Pino, with Ferdinand Suffin, Nelson Borden and John Vincent, of Clementon, motored to Tuckerton for a fishing trip and were stopping at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Cullen. They went down to Middle Creek, where they found a boat and Pino with Suffin went off a short distance from the shore. The boat sprung a leak and the two men in their excitement capsized the craft. Both men clung to the overturned boat and Suffin after tugging Pino to hold on swam ashore. Pino, who could not swim, evidently became excited, let go and sank. Several baymen heard the men on the shore shouting but thought they were in swimming and indulging in a general frolic. Capt. E. A. Horner was the first to go and investigate, found Suffin nearly exhausted and learned that Pino had disappeared. The body was found by Atmore Homan, placed in charge of Undertaker Job M. Smith and later sent to Clementon.

NEW GRETTA

H. Z. Mathis, of Hog Island, Pa., spent the week end with his family. Miss Addie Merce was the week end guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Mathis. The Girl Who Was Followed

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Nothing will pull much sooner than washing dishes. So Emily Curtis thought as she viewed the towering pile stacked beside the sink.

Tackling them half-heartedly, she let her gaze wander through the open windows across the meadows, sweet with ripened grain. Mellow October sunshine filtered through the apple laden trees of the orchard, and the vibrant wind brought to her ears the dull chop-chop of the silo.

But Emily had neither eyes nor ears for the sights and sounds of the farm. She had had enough of farms.

Pausing in the act of lifting the dishes from their bath of suds into the drainer, she dried her hands on the roller towel, and from her blouse took a crumpled letter which had been brought by the rural mail carrier that very morning. She had not showed it to John. John had never approved of Malsie.

Only one paragraph in it was really important to Emily. The rest was froth in Malsie's best style.

"You ought to be here with your voice like a bird"—the note read—"Old Gunter needs more girls. It's easy work, and you could bunk with me. I've been trying to get somebody. It cuts room rent in half."

What good did a voice like a bird do on a farm, thought Emily bitterly. You ruined it shouting your head off to the men that dinner was ready, or calling to John that the wood box needed filling. Singing Sunday evenings in the church choir where there were six altos for every soprano was only torment. If only she had the courage of a kitten?

Vague thoughts of rebellion were stirring within her, but the dull round of household tasks claimed her, crowding in on her discontent.

The next morning, Emily stood pinning her summer hat on her trim little head. It was the day for the weekly drive to Jamestown to do her marketing and meager shopping. She always looked forward to it.

But when John entered, to her surprise he was in his old farm clothes.

"Emily," he began, hesitatingly, "I'm sorry, but I can't get off this morning. That last night I hired went out on a spree last night and hasn't shown up. There's no need for you to give up going though! Jim can drive you as well as I." Jim was the boy they had taken from the county orphan asylum to do the thousand and one things about the place that did not require a man's strength. "And here," he plunged his hand into his pocket and brought out a wrinkled bill. "Perhaps this will help make up for your disappointment," he said awkwardly. "It's a little extra I had come in."

During the drive Emily nursed her anger at John for spoiling her fun, as she put it to herself.

A few minutes later Emily sent the bewildered Jim home, bearing a note to her husband which she had scrawled hastily on the back of her grocery list.

Dear John:

I'm sorry, but I'm sick of farm life. I'm taking a chance I had to go to the city. Don't think too badly of me.

EMILY.

She herself walked to the small suburban station and waited for the express.

Six months later, in a nine by twelve dingy-papered bedroom, Emily sat at a bare, uneven legged table, and dumped out the contents of her pocketbook. No, there was not very much there. Certainly not enough to carry her long if old Gunter put into execution his threat to let her go at the end of the week. There was nothing the matter with her voice, he had declared frankly, and she got by with the dancing, but she hadn't the "go," the "pep" he wanted in his bunch of girls.

As Emily pondered the future, dependent wrinkles furrowing her forehead, the door swung open and Malsie burst in, very breezy and alive.

"I'm sorry, Emily," she said, "but I'm going to give up my share of the room. I've got a chance to go in with a lot of girls uptown, and—"

"That's all right," said Emily wearily. She had suspected for some time that Malsie's desire for her presence in the city had been actuated solely by Malsie's need for some one to help out with the rent. One thing more or less to bother did not make much difference.

For Emily had something else to worry over besides losing her roommate or her job. She was losing her confidence in her ability to look out for herself.

For a week now she had been followed when she left the restaurant at midnight, followed by a slouching, stoop-shouldered individual, in a shapeless hat and worn overcoat pulled up about his ears.

Emily had expected to run into all sorts of disagreeable experiences in the big city. To her unsophisticated mind the city was full of evil. Yet, in her several months of cabaret life, this was the first bit that had touched her personally, and so far this had been merely annoying and a bit terrifying.

The evening of the day that Emily had learned of Malsie's defection, Gunter fired her. Detaining her after the other girls left, he asked her where she came from and told her she had better go back home.

Go back to the farm? Impossible! For one thing, rigidly brought up, strictly conventional John would never take her back.

Shivering with the cold which penetrated her thin jacket, she noticed with relief that the sinister shadow which had dogged her footsteps had evidently given up the idea that she was coming tonight. Yet she cast anxious glances over her shoulder until she reached the shelter of the narrow doorway which opened at the foot of the bare flight of stairs.

Climbing them wearily, she opened the door of her room. Striking a match, she touched the tiny gas jet, which gave off a warm flicker of light. Yet, by its feeble flame, Emily saw that which made her clutch her throat in terror, and utter an involuntary scream.

There at the table, his head buried in his arms, his hat slipping from his head, sat the man who had been following her.

Almost paralyzed, she yet managed to back noiselessly toward the door. But, roused by her cry, the man at the table lifted his head—and in his tired eyes, his unshaven face, Emily saw her husband.

"John," faltered Emily, the color which had left her face flooding it again.

"It's me, Emily," said her husband slowly. "You needn't be afraid. I've been seeing you home nights for some time. At first I was very angry with you—swore you should never darken my home again. But as time went on, I—I missed you, and I got to thinking of you—and I—well, I came up to see if I could find you. I kind of thought you had gone to that Malsie. After I did find you, I wanted to make sure what kind of life you were living, and so I took to following you, fixed up so you wouldn't know me. Tonight I thought you weren't coming. The farm is going to rack and ruin. I don't suppose you want to give this up?"

"Give it up?" Emily, who had been standing one hand on the door-knob, looked about her at the bed with its enamel peeled off in splashes, at the dirty wall paper, at the doorless cupboard with its meager display of cracked dishes.

"It's getting spring on the farm," went on John eagerly. "The meadow where the brook runs through is covered with violets—I saw two robins by the lilac bushes—"

"I don't deserve it," whispered Emily, and buried her face on John's shoulder.

The Month of Marriages.

June, the month of roses, is also Hymen's own. This is not a coincidence but an inherited custom handed down to the present day through the centuries. In pagan times the Romans considered June the most propitious season for contracting marriages, especially if the chosen day were that of the full moon; or the conjunction of the sun and the moon.

These and many other superstitions were retained in the Middle Ages especially those which belonged more especially to the spirit of Christianity; people then had recourse to all kinds of divinations, love philters and magical invocations, as well as prayers and fastings, which were modified according to the country and the individual. A girl agitated water in a bucket to see the image of her future husband and was careful to meet or not to meet certain animals or objects on her way to the church.—Chicago American.

Have System in Reading.

The reading of good literature should not be spasmodic. To read many hours a day for a few days, then, not to look into a book for weeks or months, will never do. Every day, if only for 15 minutes a day, some worth-while book should hold the attention. On frequent occasions if circumstances permit, it should be read aloud. Thus, steeping oneself in good words, there will gradually be an accretion in the depths of the mind of material available for personal use as the demands of conversation make necessary.—H. Addington Bruce in Chicago Daily News.

Identified by Veins.

Since the finger-print method of identification has come into use, several other methods have been suggested. An Italian scientist has suggested the use of the veins in the hand. He has found that the veins are different in different persons. The veins are easily seen when viewed with a source of light that has no red rays. The mercury-vapor arc light is suitable.—Popular Science Monthly.

sniff filled out his raiment admirably. Falstaff, on the whole, would have made a poor risk for the post of bank teller, though it is highly possible that his piffings would have been confined to comparatively small sums, enough to pay for the day's sack and venison.

One doubt occurs. If the fat man's recititude is due to contentment with a capon-lined world, what are the chances of getting a fat man to swear? This is perhaps the reason why 100 per cent honesty is unattainable. That ideal can only be realized in a world inhabited by men weighing over 180 who cuss out the waiter.—New York Post.

Truthful.

There is a man who keeps a list of all the banks in the country, so as to be able to say he keeps a bank account.

MR. OWL IS WISE BIRD.

MANY years ago, long before Mr. Fox was called clever, or sly, or Mr. Owl a wise bird, or any of the wood folk had earned any name for themselves other than their own, there was trouble between Mr. Fox and Mr. Possum.

It happened in this way. Mr. Fox one night went for chickens to a farm a long way from his home, and when he arrived he found that the poultry house door was open and it was easy enough to get all he wanted, for Mr. Dog was away.

The only trouble was that he had no place to store them, and it was too far to carry them to his home and go back for more.

Mr. Fox happened to think of Mr. Possum, and he decided that he would make a bargain with him to take care of his poultry until he could carry it to his home.

As I told you, this happened long before Mr. Fox was clever; he would not do such a thing now.

So he called on Mr. Possum and told him if he would take care of the chickens he would give him two fine ones to pay for his kindness.

Mr. Possum said he would and that he would store them safely away under a rock by his house where there was a cave.

Mr. Fox trotted back and forth all night with fat chickens which he put in the cave under the rock, but he did not know that as fast as he put them away Mr. Possum carried them to another part of the woods.

When it was almost daylight Mr. Possum took another chicken and departed for good, and when Mr. Fox looked into the cave he found only a few of the many chickens he had placed there.

Mr. Possum was nowhere to be found. He had moved bag and baggage to another home, but Mr. Fox hunted until he found him, and the trouble began.

Mr. Possum said he was not the same Mr. Possum. "I never lived in the place you speak of, and I do not know about any rock or cave or chickens; you have the wrong fellow, Mr. Fox," he said.

Mr. Fox was surprised at the bold manner of Mr. Possum, for he was sure he was the one he was looking for; still there was a chance that he had made a mistake.

Right here is where Mr. Owl earned his title. He was sitting in a tree near by where Mr. Possum had made his new home and heard all that had been said.

"Perhaps you are mistaken, Mr. Fox," he said; "you had better go back to the cave under the tree and look again."

"It is under a rock, not a tree," corrected Mr. Possum, who had just said he did not know anything about the cave or rock.

"Oh, ho," exclaimed Wise Mr. Owl, "you do know something about it, after all."

"Mr. Fox, go right in and search this fellow's home, and if he makes any trouble about it I will call all the wood folk and tell them what a deceitful fellow he is."

"Oh, how wise you are, Mr. Owl!" said Mr. Fox as he came out of Mr. Possum's house with his chickens; "you are the wisest bird I ever knew, and wise you shall be called from this day."

And when there is any dispute among the wood folk now they always call on Mr. Owl to settle it for Mr. Fox told everybody how clever and wise was Mr. Owl in finding out about his chickens, though he was careful not to tell who had them.

ANNIVERSARIES.

Moderation, the noblest gift of Heaven.

—Euripides.

RECENTLY at a silver wedding anniversary of a prominent New Yorker the invitations, which were engraved in silver, contained these words at one side: "The demands of war relief are pressing. We hope for your presence—not presents—at our silver wedding anniversary." Among the guests present at this anniversary reception were scores of New York's most noted society folk, the very people whom we usually look to for leadership in such matters of social usage. So if you are looking for a precedent in adding to your invitations for anniversary receptions or other occasions when presents might be expected some indication of the fact that you would prefer not to have them, here it is.

The fact is that often people refrain from having wedding anniversary parties for the simple reason that they hesitate to send invitations that will make the recipients feel that they are obliged to make some sort of present. When this is for a tin or wooden wedding the obligation is trifling, but when it is for a silver or golden wedding then there is more cause for this hesitancy.

Usually any anniversary for anything less than a silver wedding takes

Important to all Women Readers of this Paper

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney or bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease. If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer pain in the back, headache and loss of ambition.

Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be dependent; it makes any one so.

But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kilmor's Swamp-Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine, will do for them. By enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmor & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may receive sample size bottle by Parcel Post. You can purchase medium and large size bottles at all drug stores.

DIAMOND WORN BY CARLOTTA

"Maximilian Stone," With Unhappy History, Is Now on Exhibition at New York.

A great greenish-white diamond, known as the "Maximilian stone," is on exhibition for the first time in this country at New York. Like all large gems, this stone has a history which is not happy. It was found in Brazil about 1850, and in its rough state weighed nearly 50 carats. Ferdinand Joseph Maximilian, then archduke of Austria, traveled extensively in South America. While he was in Brazil he bought the diamond, it is said, for a price approximating $375,000.

The jewel today is in the same condition as it was when worn by the Empress Marie Charlotte in Maximilian's short reign in Mexico.

When Maximilian was executed a commission was designated to sell the diamond along with other gems that had been part of the gorgeous court. The stone was bought by an American. As part of his estate the diamond is again to be sold.

Misalliance. "So you think Agnes married beneath her?" "I do; her husband plays a miserable game of bridge."

It never pays to sow wild oats, young man; there is no market for them.

"What's in a Name?"

Facts about your name; its history; meaning; whence it was derived; significance; your lucky day and lucky jewel.

By MILDRED MARSHALL

MAGGIE.

ALTHOUGH Scottish in itself, the name Maggie is originally derived from the Persian, being of the same root as the name Margaret. To the lucky bearer of this name, the pearl is the jewel assigned. The delightful notion that the oyster, rising to the surface of the ocean at night and opening its shell in adoration, received in its mouth a drop of dew congealed by the moonbeams, is responsible for this delicate fantasy of the pearl.

The name was brought to Scotland by Margaret Eithering, wife of Malcolm Cennmde, where it became the national Scottish feminine name. Because a pearl of price is associated with the pearly gates of the celestial regions, the name of Maggie—or, more usually, its original, Margaret, has been given to innumerable saints.

By wearing her natal stone, the pearl, the bearer of the name Margaret will fulfill the promise of the gods, which gives her purity, charm and affability. Her lucky day is set as Monday, and seven is her fortunate number. For her to dream of pearls signifies faithful friends.

How It Started

FIREWORKS.

WE ARE indebted to the Chinese for the Fourth of July firecracker and other more or less deadly weapons of celebration. They used these articles, shortly after their discovery of gunpowder, to scare away any evil spirits that might be in the vicinity. Fireworks were manufactured in Italy as early as 1540, and were used in France to celebrate events of National import in 1606. The industry now centers in the United States.

HOW DO YOU SAY IT?

By C. N. LURIE

Common Errors in English and How to Avoid Them

"SIT" AND "SET."

PROBABLY It is impossible to teach the great majority of Americans the difference between the two words "sit" and "set," but grammarians have been trying to do so for many years. "Come in and set down," says one's host. He is hospitable, but his grammar is faulty. He should say, "Come in and sit down."

Whether a hen sets on a nest or sits on it is not certain, in grammar, since the point is disputed, but it is quite certain that you do not "sit" a hen on her nest; you "set" her there. It is incorrect to say: "The vase sets on the table"; say, instead, "The vase rests, or stands, on the table." Do not say, "The flagpole sets firmly in its socket," but say, "The flagpole is set firmly in its socket." If you prefer, you may say, instead, "The flagpole sits firmly in its socket."

Explained. "Pa, what's the difference between an epithet and an epitaph?" "One is applied to a man before he is dead, and the other after, my son."

CONSOLATION FOR THE FAT

Surety Company Gives Stout Denial to the Statement That "Nobody Loves Them."

Fat men need no longer go hungry for affection. The surety companies love them. Men who resort to exclamation marks when the razor slips or the black collar button deserts its post of duty may be hard on the nerves of the household, but they bring joy to bank auditors. Fat men and loud swearers pay their bills much more promptly than lean and close-lipped men, and run away much less frequently with the employer's bank roll. For this we have the authority of the chief expert of a surety company of New York.

It is good to have the statisticians give final judgment on a point which the literary students of human nature have left in doubt. If Tartuffe was underdressed, Chaudband exuded hypocrisy out of a mass of embonpoint. If Uriah Heep had the slimness demanded by clothes styles with a difference, Peck-

BIM SAVES HARRY.

Synopsis.—Samson and Sarah Traylor, with their two children, Josiah and Betsy, travel by wagon in the summer of 1831 from their home in Vergennes, Vt., to the West, the land of plenty. Their destination is the Country of the Sangamon, in Illinois. At Niagara Falls they meet a party of immigrants, among them a youth named John McNoll, who also decides to go to the Sangamon country. All of the party suffer from fever and ague. Sarah's ministrations save the life of a youth, Harry Needles, in the last stages of fever, and he accompanies the Traylor. They reach New Salem, Illinois, and are welcomed by young Abe Lincoln and others. Among the Traylor's first acquaintances are Lincoln's friends, Jack Kelso and his pretty daughter Bim, sixteen years of age. Samson decides to locate at New Salem, and raises his cabin. Led by Jack Armstrong, rowdies make trouble. Lincoln thrashes Armstrong. Harry Needles strikes Bap McNoll, who threatens vengeance.

CHAPTER V—Continued.

Harry felt the beauty of the scene but saw and enjoyed more the face of Bim Kelso as he worked and planned his own house—no cabin, but a mansion like that of Judge Harper in the village near his old home. He had filled every crevice in the rear wall and was working on the front when he heard the thunder of running horses and saw figures, dim in a cloud of dust, flying up the road again. He thought of the threat of Bap McNoll. It occurred to him that he would be in a bad way alone with those ruffians if they were coming for revenge. He thought of running toward the grove, which was a few rods from the rear door of the house, and hiding there. He couldn't bear to run. Bim and all the rest of them would hear of it. So with the sickle in his right hand he stood waiting inside the house and hoping they wouldn't stop. They rode up to the door and dismounted quietly and hobbled their horses. There were five of them who crowded into the cabin with McNoll in the lead.

"Now, you young rooster, you're goin' to git what's comin' to you," he growled.

The boy faced them bravely and warned them away with his sickle. They were prepared for such emergencies. One of them drew a bag of bird shot from his pocket and hurled it at Harry's head. It hit him full in the face and he staggered against the wall, stunned by the blow. They ran to the door. For a little time he knew not what was passing. When he came to, his hands and feet were tied and the men stood near cursing and laughing, while their leader, McNoll, was draining a bottle. Suddenly he heard a voice trembling with excitement and wet with tears saying:

"You go 'way from here or I'll kill you dead. So help me God I'll kill you. If one o' you touches him he's goin' to die."

He saw Bim Kelso at the window with her gun leveled at the head of

He Staggered Against the Wall.

McNoll. Her face was red with anger. Her eyes glowed. As he looked a tear welled from one of them and trailed down the scarlet surface of her cheek. McNoll turned without a word and walked sulkily out of the back door. The others crowded after him. They ran as soon as they had got out of the door. She left the window. In a moment the young men were galloping away.

Bim came into the house sobbing with emotion but with her head erect. She stood her gun in a corner and knelt by the helpless boy. He was crying also. Her hair fell upon his face as she looked at the spot of deep scarlet color made by the shot bag. She kissed it and held her cheek against his and whispered: "Don't cry. It's all over now. I'm going to cut these ropes."

It was as if she had known and loved him always. She was like a young mother with her first child. Tenderly she wiped his tears away with her blond, silken hair. She cut his bonds and he rose and stood before her. Her face changed like magic.

"Oh what a fool I've been!" she exclaimed.

"Why so?" he asked.

"I cried and I kissed you and we never have been introduced to each other."

She covered her eyes with her hair and with bent head went out of the door.

"I'll never forget that kiss as long as I live," said the boy as he followed her. "I'll never forget your help, or your crying either."

"Go away from me—I won't speak to you," she said. "Go back to your work. I'll stay here and keep watch."

The boy returned to his task pointing up the inside walls but his mind and heart were out in the sunlight talking with Bim. Once he looked out of the door and saw her leaning against the neck of the pony, her face hidden in his mane. When the sun was low she came to the door and said:

"You had better stop now and go home."

She looked down at the ground and added:

"Please, please, don't tell on me."

"Of course not," he answered. "But I hope you won't be afraid of me any more."

She looked up at him with a little smile. "Do you think I'm afraid of you?" she asked as if it were too absurd to be thought of. She unhooked and mounted her pony but did not go.

"I do wish you could raise a mustache," she said, looking wistfully into his face. "I can't bear to see you look so terribly young; you get worse and worse every time I see you. I want you to be a regular man right quick."

He wondered what he ought to say and presently stammered: "I—I—intend to. I guess I'm more of a man than anybody would think to look at me."

"You're too young to ever fall in love, I reckon."

"No, I'm not," he answered with decision.

"Have you got a razor?" she asked.

"No."

"I reckon it would be a powerful help. You put soap on your lip and now it off with a razor. My father says it makes the grass grow."

There was a moment of silence during which she brushed the mane of her pony. Then she asked timidly:

"Do you like yellow hair?"

"Yes, if it looks like yours."

"If you don't mind I'll put a mustache on you just—just to look at every time I think of you."

"When I think of you I put violets in your hair," he said.

He took a step toward her as he spoke and as he did so she started her pony. A little way off she checked him and said:

"I'm sorry. There are no violets now."

She rode away slowly waving her hand and singing with the joy of a bird in the springtime.

That evening when Harry was helping Samson with the horses he said:

"I'm going to tell you a secret. I wish you wouldn't say anything about it."

Samson stood pulling the hair out of his card and looking very stern as he listened while Harry told of the assault upon him and how Bim had arrived and driven the rowdies away with her gun but he said not a word of her demonstration of tender sympathy. To him, that had clothed the whole adventure with a kind of sanctity so that he could not bear to have it talked about.

Samson's eyes glowed with anger. They searched the face of the boy. His voice was deep and solemn when he said:

"This is a serious matter. Why do you wish to keep it a secret?"

The boy blushed. For a moment he knew not what to say. Then he spoke: "It ain't me so much—it's her," he managed to say. "She wouldn't want it to be talked about and I don't either."

Samson began to understand. "She's quite a girl, I guess," he said thoughtfully. "She must have the nerve of a man—I declare she must."

"Yes—sir—ee! They'd 'a' got hurt if they hadn't gone away, that's sure," said Harry.

"We'll look out for them after this," Samson rejoined. "The first time I meet that man McNoll he'll have to settle with me and he'll pay cash on the nail."

Bim, having heard of Harry's part in Abe's fight and of the fact that he was to be working alone all day at the new house, had ridden out through the woods to the open prairie and hunted in sight of the new cabin that afternoon. Unwilling to confess her extreme interest in the boy she had said not a word of her brave act. It was not shame; it was partly a kind of rebellion against the tyranny of youthful ardor; it was partly the fear of ridicule.

So it happened that the adventure of Harry Needles made scarcely a ripple on the sensitive surface of the village life. It will be seen, however, that it had started strong undercurrents likely, in time, to make themselves felt.

The house and barn were finished, whereupon Samson and Harry drove to Springfield—a muddy, crude and growing village with thick woods on its north side—and bought furniture. Their wagon was loaded and they were ready to start for home. They were walking on the main street when Harry touched Samson's arm and whispered:

"There's McNoll and Callyhan."

The pair were walking a few steps ahead of Samson and Harry. In a second Samson's big hand was on McNoll's shoulder.

"This is Mr. McNoll, I believe," said Samson.

The other turned with a scared look.

"What do you want o' me?" he demanded.

Samson threw him to the ground with a jerk so strong and violent that it rent the sleeve from his shoulder. McNoll's companion, who had felt the weight of Samson's hand and had had enough of it, turned and ran.

"What do ye want o' me?" McNoll asked again as he struggled to free himself.

"What do I want o' you—you puny little coward," said Samson, as he lifted the bully to his feet and gave him a toss and swung him in the air and continued to address him. "I'm just goin' to muss you up proper. If you don't say you're sorry and mean it I'll put a tow string on your neck and give you to some one that wants a dog."

"I'm sorry," said McNoll. "Honest I am! I was drunk when I done it."

Samson released his prisoner. A number in the crowd which had gathered around them clapped their hands and shouted, "Hurrah for the stranger!"

A constable took Samson's hand and said: "You deserve a vote of thanks. That man and his friends have made me more trouble than all the rest of the drinking men put together."

"And I am making trouble for myself," said Samson. "I have made myself ashamed. I am no fighting man, I was never in such a muss on a public street before and with God's help it will never happen again."

"Where do you live?" the officer asked.

"In New Salem."

"I wish it was here. We need men like you."

Samson wrote in his diary:

"On the way home my heart was sore. I prayed in silence that God would forgive me for my bad example to the boy. I promised that I would not again misuse the strength He has given me. In my old home I would have been disgraced by it. The minister would have preached of the destruction that follows the violent man to put him down; the people would have looked askance at me. Deacon Somers would have called me aside to look into my soul, and Judge Grandy and his wife would not have invited me to their parties. Here it's different. A chap who can take the law in his hands and bring the evil man to his senses, even if he has to hit him over the head, is looked up to. It's a reckless country. You feel it as soon as you get here. In time, I fear, I shall be as headlong as the rest of them. Some way the news of my act has got here from Springfield. Sarah was kind of cut up. Jack Kelso has nicknamed me 'The man with the iron arms,' and Abe, who is a better man every way, laughs at my embarrassment and says I ought to feel honored. For one thing Jack Armstrong has become a good citizen. His wife has fixed a pair of breeches for Abe. They say McNoll has left the country. There has been no devilry here since that day. I guess the gang is broken up—too much iron in its way."

Sarah enjoyed fixing up the cabin. Jack Kelso had given her some deer and buffalo skins to lay on the floors. The upper room, reached by a stick ladder, had its two beds, one of which Harry occupied. The children slept below in a trundle bed that was pushed under the larger one when it was made up in the morning.

"Some time I'm going to put in a window and get rid o' that stick ladder," Samson had said.

Sarah had all the arts of the New England home maker. Under her hand the cabin, in color, atmosphere and general neatness, would have delighted a higher taste than was to be found on the prairies, save in the brain of Kelso, who really had some acquaintance with beauty. To be sure the bed was in one corner, spread with its upper cover knit of gray yarn harmonizing in color with the bark of the log walls. A handsome dark brown buffalo robe lay beside it. The rifle and powder horn were hung above the mantel. The fireplace had its crane of wrought iron.

Every one in the little village came to the house warming. The people were in their best clothes. The women wore dresses of new calico—save Mrs. Doctor Allen, who wore a black silk dress which had come with her from her late home in Lexington. Bim Kelso came in a dress of red muslin trimmed with white lace. Ann Rutledge also wore a red dress and came with Abe. The latter was rather grotesque in his new linsey trousers, of a better length than the former pair, but still too short.

"I'm Just Goin' to Muss You Up Proper."

"It isn't fair to blame the trousers or the tailor," he had said when he had tried them on. "My legs are so long that the imagination of the tailor is sure to fall short if the cloth don't. Next time I'll have 'em made to measure with a ten-foot pole instead of a yardstick. If they're too long I can roll 'em up and let out a link or 'wo when they shrink. Ever since I was a boy I have been troubled with shrinking pants."

Abe wore a blue swallow-tail coat with brass buttons, the tails of which were so short as to be well above the danger of pressure when he sat down. His cowhide shoes had been well blackened; the blue yarn of his socks showed above them. "These darned socks of mine are rather proud and conceited," he used to say. "They like to show off."

He wore a shirt of white, unbleached cotton, a starched collar and black tie.

In speaking of his collar to Samson, he said that he felt like a wild horse in a box stall.

Mentor Graham, the schoolmaster, was there—a smooth-faced man with a large head, sandy hair and a small mustache, who spoke by note, as it were. Kelso called him the great articulator and said that he walked in the valley of the shadow of Lindsey Murray. He seemed to keep a watchful eye on his words, as if they were a lot of schoolboys not to be trusted. They came out with a kind of self-conscious rectitude.

The children's games had begun and the little house rang with their songs and laughter, while their elders sat by the fire and along the walls talking. Ann Rutledge and Bim Kelso and Harry Needles and John McNoll played with them. In one of the dances all joined in singing the verses:

I won't have none o' yer weevily wheat,
I won't have none o' yer barley;
I won't have none o' yer weevily wheat,
To make a cake for Charley.

Charley is a fine young man,
Charley is a dandy,
Charley likes to kiss the girls,
Whenever it comes handy.

When a victim was caught in the flying scrimmage at the end of a passage in the game of Prisoners, he or she was brought before the blindfolded judge:

"Heavy, heavy hangs over your head," said the constable.

"Fine or superfine?" the judge inquired.

"Fine," said the constable, which meant that the victim was a boy. Then the sentence was pronounced and generally it was this:

"Go bow to the wittiest, kneel to the prettiest and kiss the one that you love best."

Harry was the first prisoner. He went straight to Bim Kelso and bowed and knelt, and when he had risen she turned and ran like a scared deer around the chairs and the crowd of onlookers, some assisting and some checking her flight, before the nimble youth. Hard pressed, she ran out of the open door, with a merry laugh, and just beyond the steps Harry caught and kissed her, and her cheeks had the color of roses when he led her back.

POISONED BRAN TAKES HOP OUT OF PESTIFEROUS GRASSHOPPERS

Side and Back View of Hopperdoser for Destruction of Hoppers—Horses Are Hitched to Projecting Ends of Two-by-Four.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

There is nothing so good as poisoned bran for taking the hop out of a grasshopper and there is no better way of buying and distributing the bran than through a community organization, specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture find. In the areas where the grasshoppers come down on the farm crops like all the plagues of Egypt there should be grasshopper-fighting organizations, just as there are fire-fighting units in every city. Fighting a grasshopper invasion without the help of the neighbors is like trying to put out a fire in a powder factory with one bucket of water.

In the Pacific states the vast, uncultivated areas of mountains, foothills, and grasslands afford ideal breeding grounds for at least eight common species of grasshopper. Undisturbed, the pests can mass their forces in the spring and be ready for a descent upon the alfalfa fields and cultivated crops of the farmer when weather conditions permit. There seems to be little hope of destroying the grasshoppers in these isolated breeding areas and for that reason specialists of the bureau of entomology, United States Department of Agriculture, maintain that it will be many years before the grasshopper menace disappears from the West. But, while the eight plagues cannot be exterminated at their source, they can be met with a systematic, well-directed barrage of poisoned bait, fire, and other weapons for control when they attempt to invade the cultivated fields.

Preparing for the Attack.

Every locality should have an organization fully equipped and prepared to meet the grasshopper onslaught. All preparations should be made early in the spring before the insects have left their breeding grounds. The organization should be directed and controlled by efficient and energetic leaders, and it ought to have the co-operation and support of every farmer in the community as well as the landowners who hold title to the remote areas from which the plague spreads.

HABIT WAS STRONG ON HIM

Even Smith's Words of Wisdom Failed to Keep Jones' Attention From Wandering.

Smith and Jones were personal friends, so one day Smith took a personal friend's liberty and said to Jones:

"You mustn't take offense if I speak to you about something I have had on my mind for some time—just a little habit of yours."

"Nobody has ever had the nerve to tell you before," Smith continued in a hesitating sort of voice, "and you are such a splendid, noble fellow."

"Yes, yes," answered Jones.

Smith cleared his throat; then, with great determination, launched out:

"You're one of those fellows who never really know what is being said to them; you're always pursuing some train of thought. Any one can tell half the time you are not listening by the faraway look in your eyes. You've offended a lot of people. Of course, it's terribly rude, only you don't know it. You mustn't any more, old chap—putting his hands on Jones' shoulders. "Promise me you'll not."

Jones was then obliged to face his friend.

"Just what were you saying?" he inquired in a faraway voice.

Rents High in Stone Age.

Southern California had apartment profitters back in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, according to a scientific correspondent whose investigation of the stone age dwellings, hewn out of solid rock, has convinced him that keeping up an apartment never was a snap. At the entrance to one six-apartment cavern he found hieroglyphics, which he has deciphered to mean the rates for apartments as follows:

One abalone, one sun.

Two abalones, two suns.

Three abalones, three suns.

Twelve abalones, one moon.

Our correspondent figures that the home hunters among the Pimugna Indians had to pay at the rate of one abalone a sleep, or day, or 12 abalones per lunar month. The cave was the largest on the island and comprised the apartment house de luxe of that period. A short distance below the entrance to the stone apartment house the professor found a huge pile of empty abalone shells, proving that the landlord did a more or less rushing business.

NUT TREES GOOD FOR SHADE

Japanese Walnut Is Especially Appropriate for Farm and Door-Yard Planting.

The Japanese walnut offers possibilities for landowners who are seeking to plant nut trees for shade or other purposes; say specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. It is nearly as hardy as the black walnut and is by no means uncommon in northern and eastern states, where it is especially appropriate for farm and door-yard planting. For the present, seedling trees will have to be relied upon almost entirely, as very few budded or grafted trees are available.

This nut has been confused with the Persian or so-called English walnut, although the two are quite unlike. The Japanese is a dwarfish species, with dull-green rough leaflets, often as many as 15 or 17 to the leaf, and bears nuts in racemes of a dozen or more.

The shells are thinner than those of the black walnut, but thicker than those of the better Persian walnuts. The flavor of the kernels is much like that of the American butternut.

GROWERS STUDY CONDITIONS

Sales Concluded on Satisfactory Basis and Useful Experience Obtained in Market.

Some cabbage growers accompanied their car-lot shipments to market the past season in order to secure first-hand knowledge of shipping conditions and marketing practices. As a result, not only were sales made on a fairly satisfactory basis from the standpoint of the producer, but the growers obtained considerable useful experience through observing the handling of the cabbage in the markets. They studied conditions affecting shipments en route and became better acquainted with the demands of the large wholesale markets. The information and experience obtained were of particular value to growers located in sections where cabbage had not been grown commercially in previous years.

The plan was employed by growers having two or more cars ready for shipment at one time, and is a detail in the business of marketing farm products that experts of the bureau of markets, United States Department of Agriculture, say might sometimes be employed profitably by producers of other farm crops.

CONTROL OF WHEAT DISEASE

Farmers' Bulletin 1213 Tells of Flag Smut Discovered in Illinois County in 1915.

Methods for controlling flag smut, a destructive disease of wheat, are given in Farmers' Bulletin 1213, Flag Smut of Wheat and Its Control, issued for free distribution by the United States Department of Agriculture. The disease was discovered in 1919 near Granite City, Madison county, Ill., and in 1920 was found in 111 fields confined to 47 square miles.

Black stripes running lengthwise in the leaves and leaf sheaths are typical of flag smut. Diseased plants are stunted and rarely head. The disease is spread by spores carried on the seed, and by spores left in the field on infected plant material or on the ground, where they may be scattered in various ways, and infect wheat seedlings in the fall.

Treat with formaldehyde the infested grain as it comes from the thrasher. Burn infested straw. Sow disease-free seed on noninfested land. Treat with copper sulphate and lime the seed wheat to be sown in the infested area. Grow resistant varieties.

The bulletin may be had upon application to the division of publications, United States Department of Agriculture.

Teams and Implements.

Good teams and satisfactory implements have been the cause of success on many farms. Man cannot do good farming without sufficient teams and adaptable implements.

Bad Place for Roosts.

It is bad practice to make the fowls roost over a mass of droppings on warm nights. These send up large quantities of ammonia gas which is very harmful. Keep things clean.

Creating Reputation.

Have you named your farm and placed the sign up over the gate? That's one of the best ways of creating a reputation for your produce.

Keep Poultry House Clean.

Don't allow the litter in your poultry house to become damp and badly broken up. It will cut down your egg production if you do.

Care of Work Horses.

Take good care of the work horses these warm days.

VOICE OF REFORM.

"There was quite a lively discussion at a meeting of the master barbers yesterday."

"What about?"

"The suggestion was made that publications exploiting pugilists and chorus girls should be banished from all first class tonorial parlors."

"Was the motion carried?"

"No. Some of the master barbers contended that their clients had not been educated up to that point yet, so the motion was lost."

Good Taste.

Young Lady—"Who's that tall, distinguished-looking man standing by the fireplace?"

Dowager—"My nephew. Lives in the country all the year round. Never comes to London if he can help it."

Young Lady—"Oh, but you must introduce me to him. I simply adore savages."—Punch.

"Got a new girl, I believe, and is making some alterations to suit her ideas."

Out of Date.

Led by Conscience.

"What first led you to go into politics?"

"My conscience," replied Senator Sorghum. "As a young man I had so high an opinion of my abilities that I thought it would be an unpardonable lack of patriotism if I neglected to give my country the benefit of my services."

Little Wards of the Red Cross

LITTLE DAUGHTER OF ALBANIA

THE farm school at Sezze, with others like it, is helping to solve one of Italy's problems. Labor shortage, a perennial problem of the American farmer, is being solved for the future in Italy by the organization in that country of schools where farming is as much a part of the curriculum as reading and arithmetic. It is carrying forward the school garden army idea, now so popular in America, not only to meet a severe shortage, but also to set up a barrier against its recurrence in the future.

The school children of America are greatly interested in the success of these Italian agricultural schools, for they are aiding in the maintenance of more than 800 children in such schools and orphanages through the agency of the Junior department of the American Red Cross.

The farm school at Sezze is typical of these Italian institutions. Here 100 children from the streets of Rome, war orphans and children who lost their parents in the influenza epidemic that swept Italy the year following the World war, are being taught agriculture and given the rudiments of an education while being well cared for and restored to health in the sunshine and open air. Their ages range from 8 years to lads in their early teens.

The farm school at Sezze is unusual because it is delivering practical farm results in spite of the youth of the pupils. These youngsters are managing wheat fields, truck gardens and barnyards in a way which brings in a fair profit and goes far toward feeding the community in which they are placed. The fact that these children are responsible for the economic rebirth of the town is generally appreciated in the neighborhood, and the school is regarded as the business center of the village.

In addition to farm and school work, the boys are reconstructing the school building, an ancient monastery which is rapidly being turned into a modern structure with first-rate equipment. A new wing is well under way and American shower baths are being installed. The school is not rich enough to hire any outside labor, even if such labor could be procured. So the children of the orphanage are taking the place of the bricklayers and plasterers. In a real sense, this school is a cooperative experiment, because each boy is given a personal responsibility in the farming and a personal share in the results.

These Italian children have a great affection for their friends of the American Junior Red Cross. A few months ago a dollar bill arrived at the school anonymously in an envelope which had come from the United States, evidently sent by some one who had heard about the school. It was decided that the gift was too precious to change into lire for ordinary use. It was therefore framed and placed in the dining room. It may be taken from its frame when a special or pressing need arises. Meanwhile, the anonymous dollar hangs there as a symbol of the good will which makes American children the big brothers and big sisters of those young farmers of Italy.

Petrino and Bob have never seen each other, but they are regular friends just the same. Petrino Petruccio received a postcard from Bob Smith, Green Mountain, United States of America. Since then they correspond frequently. Petrino has named his garden plot "Green Mountain Avenue" and has put up a sign to prove it. One of the pictures shows the boys of the Sezze farm school gathered in the historic courtyard of the building, which was formerly a Dominican monastery. Umberto, youngest boy in the school, is five years old. He is sitting on the antique well which is more than 500 years old, based on a Roman foundation which goes back to the days of the emperor.

READY TO GET A BATH

Another shows a pig about to get a bath. Piccolo, a son of old "Mayolly," has prejudice against water, but the rules of cleanliness must be observed, and he is about to have a good scrub in spite of himself.

Following are leaves from the notebook of Miss Noyes, director of American Red Cross nursing service, published in the Red Cross Bulletin. They give a hint of activities among the children, as seen from Durazzo to Podgoritza:

Leaving Durazzo on Sunday afternoon, by car, we arrived in Tirana in the late afternoon. Here again we found a personnel house, with Miss McClann as hostess. This station seemed to embrace the headquarters for the financial agent, Mr. Crawley, the director of Junior Red Cross, and the transportation and supply offices. To Tirana, the present capital of Albania, various experts in government had been brought to advise the ruling group which had been established. It was interesting to meet several Americans, including Mr. Dako, from Boston, and his sister-in-law, Miss Karies, a graduate of Oberlin college, Ohio, who had been sent by the Junior Red Cross to assist in the organization of a technical school. Dr. Reynolds was also stationed at this point, acting in an advisory capacity to the work throughout Albania.

There were three separate cottages, one for the office and men personnel, the others for women. The schools had been well developed, under the auspices of the Junior Red Cross, and Miss McQuade, an American Red Cross nurse, was doing the same type of work for the school children and the refugees as that which was being done in Durazzo. The same situation, as to lack of facilities for the children and refugees prevailed here. The housing was in stables, buildings that had been partially destroyed by fire, and the like. Soup distribution was taking place from a tent; the Albanians had provided for the cooking and the help, while the Red Cross supervised the distribution and provided the food. There was a morning ration of cocoa and an afternoon ration of hot soup which contained meat, beans and lentils. I shall never forget the pathetic line of children and adults—ragged, forlorn and depressed, for whom there seemed, as one watched them, absolutely no hope.

From Tirana we went to Scutari. Here, also, we found a comfortable Red Cross personnel house with three Red Cross workers—Miss Cleveland, who is developing a school for the Junior Red Cross; Miss Alexander, who is acting as an accountant, and Miss Hall, a nurse. They were doing the same type of work as that which was done in the other stations, except that the group of children taken into the school were refugees.

After being cleaned up, clothed and physically improved, the children were transferred to the native schools, returning daily for food. They were being taught English, reading and writing by native Albanian teachers, sewing and some manual work. A dispensary was well developed, connecting with shower baths with an ample supply of hot water. From eighty to one hundred children visited the dispensary every day, the nurse following the children back to their makeshift homes. The midday meal for the children consisted of bread, soup and onions, and at four o'clock cocoa and sometimes milk. The children were weighed at regular intervals and they were being taught how to play.

At Podgoritza we found the Red Cross activity somewhat different from that at the stations previously visited in Albania. Here there were orphanages, with schools attached. Podgoritza is the largest city in Montenegro and is depressingly shabby, with an accentuated Mohammedan atmosphere. Miss Benedict, a representative of the Junior Red Cross, was in charge of the Junior work at this point, and, like Miss Cleveland and Miss Metcalf, most enthusiastic. The little orphanage at Podgoritza, where one hundred orphans of tender age were living, was directed by Miss Robinson, assisted by Jean Fraser, both Red Cross nurses. In connection with the orphanage was a delightful little dispensary; on all sides one was impressed by the cleanliness and order. The little children were being taught kindergarten work, such as paper-cutting, knitting, sewing, gardening, laundry work, etc.

Somewhat different was the orphanage at Danilovgrad, where the larger boys, 150 in number, were taken. We found Miss Peters, an American Red Cross nurse, in charge of the infirmary. The building was formerly an insane hospital, remodeled by the Junior Red Cross. The roof and many other parts of the building leaked and after three weeks of rain a generally damp and sodden condition resulted. The school building was new and there were two or three native teachers. Plans were being made to teach the boys trades.

At Tirana, Scutari and Podgoritza hospitals have been developed under the auspices of the American Red Cross commission. We made a special point of visiting each one of these and were delighted to find that the work had been carried on in a fairly commendable manner. The native women at Tirana, trained by our American Red Cross nurses, were doing the best they could with the nursing. At Scutari, Austrian Sisters had been secured for the work, and at Podgoritza, natives and Anstrians. They all were proud of the equipment, linen, instruments, sterilizing outfit, dressing covers, etc., which had been installed by the American Red Cross.

The hospital at Podgoritza, which had been established in the palace of Prince Mirko, had not been maintained at quite the same degree of efficiency as those at the other two places, although the building was more adaptable.

The conclusion that one draws after visiting these stations, where the Red Cross has formerly operated, is the importance of developing strong local committees and a group of local workers. One of the best illustrations of this type of work is the child welfare work at Athens.

MAKE WHIPS AND CUSTARD DISHES

Eggs Form Basis of Many Delicious Desserts During Early Spring and Summer.

SOME SIMPLE RECIPES GIVEN

Thrifty Housewives Take Advantage of Plentiful Supply of Eggs to Convert Them into Nutritious Concoctions.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In early spring and summer, when eggs are plentiful and cheap, the thrifty among the housekeepers utilize plenty of them for desserts. When this is done the rest of the meal does not need to be quite so "heartey."

The following recipes are recommended by food specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture:

Soft Custard.

1 cup milk 2 tablespoons sugar
1/4 teaspoon vanilla 1-18 teaspoon salt
1 egg

Heat the milk in a double boiler. Mix the eggs in a bowl with the sugar and salt. Add hot milk slowly, stirring, and return mixture to the double boiler. Cook until custard will coat a silver spoon. Strain and serve. If the custard curdles set the pan into cold water and beat the custard until smooth.

Steamed or Baked Custard.

1 pint milk 1/4 cup sugar
2 eggs 1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon nutmeg or cinnamon

Mix eggs as for soft custard. Strain into custard cups and steam until firm over hot water, which is boiling gently. To bake, strain the custard into cups and place in a pan of warm water. Bake in a moderate oven until the custard is firm. To test a steamed or baked custard, slip a knife blade to the bottom of the cup in the center of the custard and draw out without turning. If the knife is not coated the custard has cooked enough. Grate the nutmeg over the surface and cool before serving.

When a Custard is Baked a Slow Oven is Best.

Floating Island.

1 quart milk 5 eggs (yolks)
1/2 teaspoon salt 1/2 teaspoon vanilla
1/2 cup sugar

Prepare as a soft custard. The whites should be beaten light and two tablespoons powdered sugar added for the meringue. When the custard is cool it may be poured into sauce dishes and the meringue dropped in large spoonfuls into it.

Custard Pudding.
1/2 cup pearl tapioca 1/2 cup sugar
or rice 2 cups milk
3 eggs (yolks) 2 eggs (whites)
1/2 teaspoon vanilla 1/2 teaspoon salt

Soak the tapioca in enough cold water to cover it until it absorbs the water. Add the milk and cook in a double boiler until the tapioca is soft and transparent. Combine the yolks of eggs with sugar and salt and add to the mixture in the double boiler. Cook until it thickens. Add stiffly beaten whites and flavoring, and when cold serve. Rice must be cooked in boiling water until soft.

Apple Whip.

2 cups apple sauce Cream for serving
3 eggs (whites)

Cook six or eight medium-sized tart apples until soft in just enough water to keep them from burning. Add sirup to sweeten sufficiently and one-eighth teaspoonful grated nutmeg. Cool. Press the apple sauce through a strainer and add to it the stiffly beaten whites of eggs. Beat until light and foamy. Pile onto saucers and serve with fresh cream or a custard sauce made of the egg yolks. This sauce may be prepared by the same method as for soft custard, omitting the whites of eggs. Canned fruit, such as peaches, figs, cherries or guava, may be substituted in the same proportion for the apples.

LEMONS CONDUCE TO HEALTH AND PLEASE

Have New Importance in Diet, Say Specialists.

Long List of Beverages and Desserts in Which Juice Can Be Used, as Well as in Number of Sauces for Fish and Meat.

In the olden times sailors who took long trips and ate no fresh vegetables and fruits for weeks or months were likely to fall victims to scurvy. Finally a cure or a partial cure for it was found in lemon juice.

Of late years scientists have been making a study of scurvy, its cause and its cure and of the conditions that make the body proof against this disease. They have discovered a substance called vitamin C, which seems to prevent and even to cure this disease. It is found in many foods, among them tomatoes and such citrus fruits as oranges, grapefruit and lemons.

Lemons, therefore, have a new importance in the diet, according to food specialists in the United States Department of Agriculture, office of home economics. They are no longer to be valued simply for their flavor, but also as a source of one of these necessary substances.

Lemons can be prepared in all sorts of ways in the preparation of meals. There is a long list of beverages and desserts in which lemon juice is used, as well as a number of delicious sauces that expert cooks have invented to serve on fish and meat. Many of these sauces the busy housekeeper has no time to make, but she can cut a lemon in two and put it on the table to serve with fish, oysters, or meat. Some people think that a little lemon juice adds just the zest needed to make eggs on toast a tasteful dish. Lemon juice is also good on spinach and other green vegetables, on many kinds of salads, and also as flavoring for pudding sauces and cakes.

Suits of Divergent Lines

WHERE there are rumors, creeping and flying about, that Fashion has resolutely turned her back on everything but long and full skirts, there are also signs that a revolt against her new ruling is brewing. The very short and very narrow skirt is no more, but it is not to be succeeded by skirts going to the other extreme, for street wear at least. This is a case of self-determination for American women and the long skirt is an abomination on the street.

The suit at the right of the two pictured embodies all the promised innovations in style, in a conservative way: the long, wide skirt, the sharply defined waistline, and it awaits the approval of many women. It is made of a soft wool suiting with a plain skirt. The coat is embellished with an embroidered panel at the front that widens toward the bottom and has long coat sleeves. These are finished at the hand with two narrow folds. The snappy suit in black and white shepherd's check at the left is built on entirely different lines, more familiar and more graceful. It has at least an even chance with its competitor for success. These checked suits are shown in several quiet two-color combinations, as brown and blue, brown and beige, blue and gray and so on, and these darker colors are practical for winter as well as summer wear. The suit pictured has a straight skirt, wide enough for comfort and long enough for style. Its businesslike, mannish lines follow those of the figure vaguely. It has revers and crescent-shaped pockets bound with braid and fastens at the waistline with two link buttons.

Sports and Outdooring Hats

IN HATS, as in suits, the styles designed for sports wear were the forerunners of others that have a wider field of usefulness, but preserve the smartness and informality of the sport models. No better word has been discovered for describing millinery of this sort than "outdooring" hats. They are simply a combination of sport and tailored ideas that make the most adaptable of millinery and the most comfortable and durable as well. The sport hat, pure and simple, is indeed simple, but the out dooring hat often only makes believe to be simple, its making is sometimes an intricate piece of work.

The group of hats shown above includes adaptable models that will prove very useful to their owners. At the top is a shape with a bell crown draped with wide, soft braid and a straight brim of redda, all in white. Plaited strands of narrow black and white ribbon outline the brim and a sash of the black ribbon encircles the crown. At the right a wide-brimmed

A modified sailor shape, in lisse braid with a slightly rolling brim, is finished with a wide band of fallie ribbon. Such a hat is much at home anywhere that sport or street hats are worn, as one may gather from the sweater coat and angora scarf found in the company of a high-necked lace jabot that are shown with it. The fine, wide-brimmed Panama hat, having its wide crown covered with narrow fallie ribbon in two colors, is of just the same character as the sailor hat. The ribbon is cleverly placed in two overlapping and interwoven rows.

There is no mistaking the vogue for lavender and azure hats this late spring. They are being worn now with dark suits and dresses and when the summer fabrics come into general use they are likely to be more popular than ever. The reds have not been altogether banished, Indian, geranium and other shades being noticed.

Curfew Has Worked Well.

In the Middle Ages a bell was rung as a signal for fires to be covered up for the night and consequently for the people to go to bed. The word curfew is derived from the French words, couvrir, to cover, and feu, fire. In the United States a curfew has been sounded to warn young people to be within doors unless accompanied by adults. It is said that over 3,000 towns and cities in this country now have curfew ordinances and some of them report as large a decrease as 80 per cent in juvenile delinquency since the enactment of such laws.—Exchange.

The Phoebe, of the Flycatcher Family.

The phoebe, a small, grayish-brown bird, belongs to the flycatcher family. It takes its name from its monotonous call, "pewit, phoebe; phoebe, pewit," continuously repeated, as it flies about in search of a habitation. The phoebe preys on insects, which it captures while on the wing, and is therefore of benefit to farmers. The common phoebe is also known as pewee and as pewit. It, however, should not be confused with the wood pewee, which is a different species of flycatcher.

About the Rich.

There are just two classes of rich men—those who claim they earned every dollar they possess, and the others who admit that while they may not have earned all they have they deserve it, none the less.

In Defense of Corsets.

Sir James Cantile, the great surgeon and authority on tropical diseases, is a warm defender of corsets. In his opinion the comparative absence of liver troubles in women is due largely to the equable temperature their girdles obtain through wearing corsets. And more boys than girls die in childhood because the former do not wear corsets. He urges men to wear cholera belts—a strip of flannel around the waist—to give them the protection that corsets give to women.

Efficient Reading.

The only way to read with any efficiency is to read so heartily that dinner time comes two hours before you expect it. To sit with your Livy before you and hear the geese that saved the capital cackling, and to see with your own eyes the Carthaginian sutlers gathering up the rings of the Roman knights after the battle of Cannae and heaping them into bushels; and to be so intimately present at the actions of which you are reading that when any one knocks at the door it will take you two or three seconds to determine whether you are in your study or on the plains of Lombardy looking at Hannibal's weather-beaten face—that is the only kind of study that is not tiresome, almost the only kind that is not useless.—Sydney Smith.

The Mahometan calendar is dated from the flight of Mahomet from Mecca to Medina, in 622.

Household Questions

Keep root vegetables in a dry place.
Puff paste must be made rapidly in a cool room.
Finely chopped pimento may be added to fish cutlet mixture.

When buying pecan nuts avoid those which have a bright red color.

A little scoop spoon, hung by the sink, clears the sink outlet from bits.

Choose a dishpan with india rubber feet. It is quieter and keeps cleaner.

Cold baked beans seasoned with chopped onion and served on a bed of lettuce makes an appetizing dish.

A New Fabric for Blouses.

Among the novelties for blouses are twilled rainbow silks, copied by English looms from old Roman patterns. These are severely tailored, with broad shoulder line and short back. They have gusset breast pockets and are cut for high or low neck fastening with seven bullet pearl stud buttons arranged close together and reaching only to the bust line.

Fashionable Colors.

There is no mistaking the vogue for lavender and azure hats this late spring. They are being worn now with dark suits and dresses and when the summer fabrics come into general use they are likely to be more popular than ever. The reds have not been altogether banished, Indian, geranium and other shades being noticed.

Fordson

"Yes I've More Time For Myself Since I Got a Fordson"

THE FORDSON Tractor is taking much of the drudgery out of farm life; it is solving the labor problem; it is reducing the cost of preparing land by almost one half of what it was with horses; and it is saving ONE THIRD TO ONE HALF OF THE FARMER'S TIME; and making farm life more attractive.

The Fordson will run your threshing machine—and at the most opportune time for you. It will operate the milking machine, saw your wood, fill your silo, pump the water, and take care of every kind of belt work—And don't forget—it will plow six to eight acres in a ten hour day, handling two plows with ease.

Thus the Fordson is the ideal year-round tractor. It will pay for its fall and winter keep in many ways.

There's a big story to tell you about the Fordson—and a true one—come in and get the facts. Or, if you prefer, telephone or drop us a card and we will bring them to you.
