STATE FOR FULL WIDTH STREETS

Senator Hagaman Introduces Bill for Extra Width Roads Under Reimbursement Plan

A bill has been introduced by Senator Hagaman of Lakewood which will permit cities, boroughs and townships to pave streets from curb to curb under the state reimbursement plan. The state highways are constructed on a uniform width of twenty feet. In many places the local governing bodies have desired to have the paving extend from curb to curb in towns. In the past this could only be done by raising the necessary funds by assessment against the abutting property owners and by general taxation. The bill proposed by Senator Hagaman would permit the extra width being provided for by the State Highway department under the reimbursement plan. In talking with a representative of the Lakewood Citizen in regard to the proposed legislation the Ocean County senator said there was every indication that the bill would be passed. Its passage would be of great benefit to the larger towns as a part of the State Highway system to be built this year runs through the Main streets.

WEAVER DECLINES RE-APPOINTMENT TO BOARD OF EDUCATION

Mayor Names Dr. Chas. H. Conover in His Stead. Organization For Year Effected.

Greatly to the regret of the people of Pleasantville, John S. Weaver, who had just been appointed by Mayor Crawford as his own successor for a five-year term on the Board of Education, felt that his constantly increasing mercantile business made it impossible for him to accept the honor, and he notified the Mayor accordingly. The Mayor then selected Dr. Charles H. Conover for the office. The Board met as required by law on Feb. 1 in the afternoon at the High School building and organized for the year by the re-election of Arthur H. Stiles as president. Dr. Conover was chosen vice-president.

Other officers selected were: Secretary, Charles E. Jackson; custodian of school funds, Webster Price; solicitor, L. D. Champion. The other members of the Board are Lewis R. Smith, Warren C. Marshall and Robert H. Zane. Mr. Marshall was the only absentee from the meeting. Dr. Conover is a former Tuckerton resident and is well known in this vicinity.

BEACH HAVEN WILL INSTALL ELECTRIC PLANT

At the meeting of the Mayor and Council of Beach Haven, Monday night, it was unanimously decided to take steps toward the installation of an electric light and power plant. A representative of the General Electric Company was present and a consulting engineer will probably submit plans in the near future. Mayor Willis has given his approval of this improvement. At the meeting Monday night all councilmen were present except Mr. Walsh. It is estimated that the plant will cost about $65,000 and will be made large enough to take care of future demands. A portion of Long Beach Township will probably be lighted from this system.

The road was bad over the State road to Manahawkin. Those who had business on the beach from the mainland and came by auto, know this, among some of these were R. F. Rutter and son, William P., George Kelly and Capt. Henry Cowperthwaite of West Creek. George says he is not coming over again no matter what happens and Capt. Henry says not to look for him until the 4th of July. However, the men got to work on the roads the last of the week and with some sun shine and wind to help them will soon have them in A no. 1 condition.

Up to the Neck.
A bachelor who is forever putting his foot in it recently visited the proud parents of a new boy.
The mother held up the bundle for inspection by the bachelor and asked gaily: "Tell us now, frankly, which of us do you think he is like?"
After a careful scrutiny the bachelor replied: "Well, of course, it isn't very interesting looking yet, but he's wonderfully like both of you."

All He Asked.
Old Crusty—You ask for my daughter? Why, young man, at your present salary you could not even dress her.
Sutor—Oh, yes, sir! I could keep her in gloves.
Old Crusty—Gloves! Do you mean to insinuate that my daughter would wear only gloves?
Sutor—Pardon me, sir; I asked only for her hand.

How Now?
Following the birth notices in a paper there is a line: "Our Ads Bring Results."—Exchange.
An undiscussed problem grows more complicated.

Taking a Farm Scene.
"Shoot!" cried a stern voice at the side of the road.
"And then?"
"I threw on the emergency brake and my wife fainted."
"Highwaymen?"
"No, a movie director was issuing an order to his camera squad."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

A Cruel Test.
A Germantown lad who is possessed of even more curiosity than the average child, recently sought out his mother to acquire more information concerning affairs in his household.
"Mother," he asked, "why is it that sister sings so much when her young man is here?"
"I think, dear," said the mother, softly, "that she is trying to test his love."—Philadelphia Ledger.

GET COLOR INTO YOUR PALE CHEEKS

If Your Face is Your Fortune, Don't Look Like a Bankrupt.

Who does not want red lips, a good, clear, healthy complexion and bright, flashing eyes? Some people have such wonderfully good health nothing seems to hurt them. Others could so easily have fine color and more strength and vigor if they would help nature with Gude's Pepto-Mangan. It is a splendid tonic that physicians have prescribed for thirty years. It is not an experiment. It is not merely a temporary help, because it makes plenty of red blood and, as everybody knows, red blood is the only sure foundation of permanent health and strength. Get Pepto-Mangan of your druggist—and take it a few weeks and see how much better you feel and look. Sold in liquid and tablet form. Advertisement.

Not Really Remarkable.
"Do you know anything about palmistry, Herbert?" she asked. "Oh, not much," he answered, "although I had an experience last night which might be considered a remarkable example of palmistry. I happened to glance at the hand of a friend, and I immediately predicted he would presently become the possessor of a considerable amount of money. Before he left the room he had a nice little sum handed to him." "And you foretold that from his hand?" "Yes, it had four aces in it."

When a boy is silent he is learning most.

BETWEEN THE LINES
You will not find a sentiment
In this, my Valentine;
To put such words on paper seems
To cheapen thoughts divine.
Tis not the words writ large or bold,
Or even those writ fine
That stir the heart the most, 'tis those
That hide between each line.

—From the Philadelphia Ledger.

THE DAYS GONE BY

What has become
Of ye Olde way time
When you sent your girl
A Valentine?

Not one of these modern kind.
I mean
The ones that folded
With lace between.

And a heart with an arrow
Running right through,
And a verse inside about
"Violets blue."

Whose jingling rhyme
Sent thrills through your heart,
'Til you'd almost feel
Dan Cupid's dart.

It's scented folds
Made you dizzy with hope.
Remember, it smelled
Like a new bar of soap.

And when it came
You trembled for fair,
When you looked and found HER
Name written there.

VALENTINES OF OLDER STYLE

May Seem Somewhat Funny to Those Accustomed to the Somewhat Advanced Ideas Prevailing Today.

The timid reluctance of an old-fashioned Valentine girl is expressed by the lines:

"Of course you may be bashful,
But think how much 'twould please me
If you would be my Valentine,
And try no more to tease me."
"He loves me!" cries a funny little maiden, as with a moving hand she plucks astonishingly large petals from a daisy.

Another, with a comic scowl, remarks, "Say Kid, put on your chains; you're skidding." Strictly up-to-date is an automobile of which the tonneau is a huge red heart. The young man in it is directing his course with an arrow which pierces the heart, and beneath is the sentiment, "I'd like to park this at your door."

FEBRUARY FOURTEEN
Oh, ware ye all, my maidens fair,
And ware ye, gentlemen,
For there is danger in the air
Now Cupid's come again,
Encase your hearts in adamant,
And guard them round about,
For Cupid is a sly gallant
And like to draw them out.

Oh, guard ye well, my maidens all,
And ye, my gentlemen;
Where Cupid's darts are like to fall
Is always uncertain.
Gird on your armor, strong and true,
And steel your hearts, and wait,
And be convinced he shoots at you
Ere you capitulate.

Readers of Dickens Will Recall the Humorous Incident in Which "Sam Weller" Figures.

While the artistic quality of valentines of today is markedly superior to what it used to be, the pictured elements composing them are much the same as ever. Charles Dickens gives an amusing description, wherein he tells how Sam Weller, gazing into a stationer's window on St. Valentine's eve, beheld "a highly colored representation of a couple of human hearts skewered together with an arrow cooking before a cheerful fire, while a male and a female cannibal in modern attire—the gentleman clad in a blue coat and white trousers, and the lady in a deep red pelisse with a parasol to match—were approaching the meal with hungry eyes. A decidedly indelicate young gentleman, in a pair of wings and nothing else, was depicted as superintending the cooking."

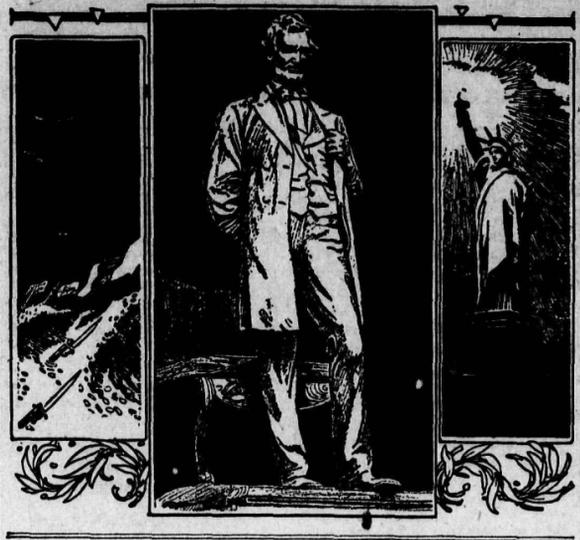

WROTE VERSE TO VALENTINE

Many Famous English Poets Have Invoked Muse in Honor of the Good Old Saint.

Shakespeare and Chaucer allude to St. Valentine's day, and so did Dryden, whose little known beauties are so much neglected by our own day; one of whose most exquisite poems is that of "To His Valentine." Donne, too, is worth browsing into for valentine verse, as his epithalamium on the marriage of the Princess Elizabeth to Frederick Count Palatine, St. Valentine's day, 1614, attests. Perhaps the earliest writer of valentines of whom we have record is Charles, duke of Orleans, who was taken prisoner by the English at the battle of Agincourt.

The collecting of valentines opens up to one a store of curious lore of other days in connection with the subject, but nearly all of the old customs of St. Valentine's day have disappeared except the one of sending the valentines themselves. Pepys also introduces

LINCOLN FORESAW POSSIBLE DANGER

URGED NECESSITY FOR RESPECT FOR LAW AND ORDER.

Words of the Great Emancipator Especially Significant in the Turmoil of the World Today.

In his first great patriotic speech, now too little known, Abraham Lincoln forecast many of the present day political and social conditions. The theme of this speech was the danger to American institutions that would come from within and the need for a greater respect for law and order.

"In the great journal of things happening under the sun," said Mr. Lincoln, "we, the American people, find our account running the date of the Nineteenth century of the Christian era. We find ourselves in the peaceful possession of the fairest portion of the earth as regards extent of territory, fertility of soil and salubrity of climate. We find ourselves under the government of a system of political institutions conducting more essentially to the ends of civil and religious liberty than any of which the history of former times tells us.

"We, when mounting the stage of existence, found ourselves the legal inheritors of these fundamental blessings, found ourselves in the acquirement or establishment of them, they are a legacy bequeathed to us by once a hardy, brave, and patriotic, but now lamented and departed, race of our ancestors. Theirs was the task (and nobly they performed it) to possess themselves, and through themselves upon its goodly land, and to uphold upon its hills and its valleys a political edifice of liberty and equal rights; 'tis ours only to transmit these—the former unprofaned by the foot of an invader, the latter undecayed by the lapse of time and untorn by usurpation—to the latest generation that fate shall permit the world to know. This task of gratitude to our fathers, justice to ourselves, duty to posterity and love for our species in general all imperatively require us faithfully to perform.

"How, then, shall we perform it? At what point shall we expect the approach of danger? By what means shall we fortify against it? Shall we expect some transatlantic military giant to step the ocean and crush us at a blow? Never!

"All the armies of Europe, Asia, and Africa combined, with all the treasure of the earth (our own excepted) in their military chest, with a Bonaparte for a commander, could not by force take a drink from the Ohio or make a track on the Blue ridge in a trial of a thousand years.

"At what point is the approach of danger to be expected? I answer, if it ever reaches us it must spring up amongst us; it cannot come from abroad. If destruction be our lot we must ourselves be its author and finisher. As a nation of free men we must live through all time, or die by suicide."

After giving some examples of the evil effects on the innocent as well as the guilty, which occurred in the operation of mob violence, Mr. Lincoln continued:

"I know the American people are much attached to their government; I know they would suffer much for its sake; I know they would endure evils long and patiently before they would ever think of exchanging it for another—yet, notwithstanding all this, if the laws be continually disregarded and

SELECTED CABINET WITH CARE

Lincoln Considered Many Men Before Selecting Those He Desired as His Assistants.

The first Lincoln cabinet consisted of William H. Seward, Salmon P. Chase, Simon Cameron, Gideon Welles, Caleb B. Smith, Edward Bates and Montgomery Blair.

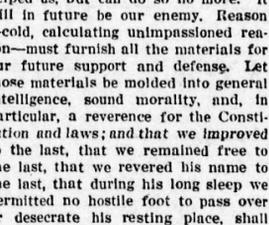

Vice President Hamlin was born the same year and about six months after President Lincoln. All cabinet members save Postmaster General Blair, were older than himself, although Secretaries Chase and Smith were but a year his senior. The latter was the only member of the original first cabinet to die before the close of the Civil war.

In selecting his cabinet of seven, Lincoln also considered the names of Col. Henry S. Lane of Indiana, Schuyler Colfax, William L. Dayton, John C. Fremont, Randal Hunt, John A. Gilmer, Kenneth Rayner, Robert E. Scott, John M. Botts, William Winter

Davis, Bailey Peyton and Meredith P. Gentry. Of these, Messrs. Gilmer and Scott declined, and the others for one reason or another went into the discard to make way for those finally chosen.

A Man Apart.
One of his eulogists declares that Lincoln is not a type. He stands alone—no ancestors—no fellows—no successors." The facts fully justify the tribute. Assuredly the great Emancipator was a man apart, without equals or followers, and he himself waived all claims to ancestry. "I don't know who my grandfather was," he remarked, "and am much more concerned to know what his grandson will be."—Frederick Trevor Hill.

MONTHS OF SUFFERING

How a Baltimore Girl Recovered Her Health

Baltimore, Maryland.—"For several months I suffered with severe backache and general weakness. I could not sleep comfortably at night for pains in my back. I found your book at home one day and after reading it began at once to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have had very good results and some of my girl friends are taking it now. You may use this letter to help other girls, as the letters in your book helped me."—ROSE WADSWORTH, 3018 Roseland Place, Baltimore, Md.

That is the thought so often expressed in letters recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. These women know what they have suffered, they describe their symptoms and state how they were finally made well. Just plain statements, but they want other women to be helped.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a medicine made from medicinal roots and herbs, and without drugs, to relieve the sickness women so often have, which is indicated by backache, weak feelings, nervousness, and no ambition to get anything done or to go anywhere. It has helped many women. Why not try it?

MR. COON'S SNOW MAN

MR. FOX had not had good luck catching hens and chickens at the barnyard for a long time. "If I could only be around there then without being seen," thought Mr. Fox. "I might get one before Mr. Dog gives the alarm, but here I hide every day behind this rock and never once has one of those silly creatures left the barnyard."

Mr. Fox's thoughts came thick and fast and one came to him just then that caused him to run for home with lighter steps than he had for a long time past.

He went right to Mr. Coon's house, for it was a nice, sunny day, and got him up. "I want you to do something for me," said Mr. Fox, "and if you watch out you should be able to get a nice dinner as well."

"Now all you have to do, Mr. Coon, is to cover me with snow, so I will look like a snow man, and when those hens and chickens come along I'll pop out of my white coat and grab one."

"One?" questioned Mr. Coon, "where do I come in?"

"Well, for mercy sake, you don't expect me to do all the work, do you?" exclaimed Mr. Fox. "If I stand here all night in the cold snow to get them out here I guess you can take a chance at getting one for yourself. I shall have all I can do to look out for my own dinner."

"There," said Mr. Coon at last, "no one would ever dream but you are a real, true snowman."

"I am sure I feel like one," Mr. Fox muttered. "I am more thankful than ever I was before for this nice thick coat of fur. I do hope the sun comes out bright and early today."

But there was no answer, for Mr. Coon was some distance away now and running very fast toward the homes of the wood folk.

The moon was still shining when he returned some time later with Timmy and Benny Coon and all their playmates, and even the grown-ups came, too, for Mr. Coon had told them of a big snowman he had seen and that if they hurried he was sure they all could have great sport snowballing it before daybreak.

Of course, they were careful not to make a noise, for they did not wish to disturb the slumbers of Mr. Dog if he happened to be unchained.

First, they all made nice, large, hard snowballs, which Mr. Coon showed them how to prepare by mixing a little water with the snow, and when they

SADIE

THE quaint name of Sadie, lately spelt Sadye, has its origin with Sarah. It comes from a Hebrew verb meaning to fight or rule, and hence came to signify "princess." The first record of the use of Sarah or Sara belongs to Eble history where the wife of Abraham was so called.

Sadie came into existence through the Irish—unless one cares to believe that she is only an Americanization of one of Sarah's many diminutives. But for the sake of etymological exactness, it is nice to believe that the Irish Sadhbh was the real forerunner of Sadie.

But between the time of Abraham's wife and the appearance of the Irish version of her name, Sarah had been adopted by other countries and had won great popularity. In England Sara Beauchamp gave it vogue in the and a high pile they all began to throw them.

"Try for his shoulders first," said Mr. Coon in a whisper. He wanted the fun to last as long as possible and he was sure if they struck Mr. Fox on the head and broke away the snow he would jump out and run.

All the little animals were having great fun, and so were the grown-ups, when all at once Timmy Coon, with a well-directed aim, threw a very hard snowball right in the face of the snowman and away went the white covering and there was the scared-looking face of Mr. Fox.

"Well, if it isn't Mr. Fox," said Mr. Coon, just as if he knew nothing about it. "This is a good joke, but, of course, you always think of some funny trick to play on us, Mr. Fox, and we might have guessed you were up to something as you were not with us."

Mr. Fox did not feel a bit like joking, but he had to smile, for he did not dare say anything for fear Mr. Coon would tell the others how he had tried to get Mr. Coon to work for him without giving him anything in return.

He knew the animals would all laugh when they heard how Mr. Coon had paid him off by getting him snowballed, and he did not like to be laughed at.

When they came to the turn in the wood path, where Mr. Coon had to leave the rest, he called to them: "Good night, boys, and, Mr. Fox, when you want something done for nothing never pick out a coon."

WHAT ABOUT RINGS?

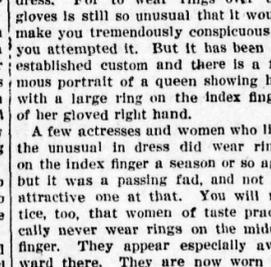

The apparel of proclaiming the man—Shakespeare.

IT MAY be that some friend of yours in Paris will write and tell you that "they" are wearing rings outside of their gloves in the French capital, and from New York you may hear that this fad has reached this side of the Atlantic. But in spite of this information you will probably not choose to wear your rings in this way, and to do so would show not very good taste if you belong to just a sane, average group of mortals who do not strive after the new and unusual in dress. For to wear rings over the gloves is still so unusual that it would make you tremendously conspicuous if you attempted it. But it has been an established custom and there is a famous portrait of a queen showing her with a large ring on the index finger of her gloved right hand.

A few actresses and women who like the unusual in dress did wear rings on the index finger a season or so ago, but it was a passing fad, and not an attractive one at that. You will notice, too, that women of taste practically never wear rings on the middle finger. They appear especially awkward there. They are now worn almost always either on the ring finger or on the little finger.

It is not in very good taste, and it is never attractive, to wear many rings on one finger. Fingers weighed down by diamonds indicate that the wearer is more anxious to show the value of her rings than their beauty. A married woman does not wear any ring but her wedding and engagement ring, or her wedding ring alone, on her left hand ring finger. Of course, there are some married and engaged women who do not care much for the wearing of these betrothal and wedding rings, who sometimes substitute for them a ring of another sort. But in this case the other ring should be worn instead of the wedding or betrothal ring and not with it.

The old-time rule used to be that a well-bred woman never wore diamonds in the morning, and you will still notice that most women of taste wear none save in the form of their engagement ring. At least, one should not reign of Edward I and Sarrota de Moulton, who lived in a former reign, was also supposed to possess a name which was another and favorite form of Sarah.

The French preferred Sara without the "h" and it still continues in great vogue there. They have another form, Sarotte, which is also popular. Ireland's Sadhbh and America's Sadie are apparently the only other existing forms.

Sadie has a curious talismanic gem—malachite. If it is engraved with an image of the sun, it will bring her peace, freedom from danger and disease, and sound sleep. It is particularly lucky for children, and it is said that a piece of malachite tied to a child's cradle will protect it from dangers throughout later life. Saturday is Sadie's lucky day and 7 her lucky number.

TURNING TO HOME BUILDING

Gratifying Increase in Construction Noted in Practically All Parts of the Country.

It is gratifying to read with what vigor and energy Americans are building homes for themselves. During the war and for a time after it few private homes were built, but now the country is making up for lost time. In the ten months of this year ending October 31, more than $600,000,000 worth of houses were built, and before the year is ended the value of newly constructed buildings will be above $722,000,000. Domiciles will help the nation to bring about better conditions. Men who own houses always are good citizens; they feel of more importance in the land, and no man on earth will fight harder for anything than will the person who battles to protect the roof that covers himself and family. It is believed that 1922 will be the banner year in the putting up of houses; perhaps their total value will reach the billion mark. Then will come the cheaper rents; landlords no longer will go about baiting and hazing tenants, but rather will they be offering—as of old—a month of free rent to those who will lease their apartments.—New York Morning Telegraph.

Village Has No Poor.

Stony Bottom, W. Va., a village of forty-two families, challenges the world for the honor as the most model and contented town.

There are just thirty-five families with an average of four persons each in the village who own their own homes and seven other families who pay the landlord for their domiciles.

Of the thirty-five home owners but one has an encumbrance on his property, and that is small and will be cleared off within sixty days. A fine undenominational church counts every resident of the town as a member. There are no poor people in Stony Bottom, neither are there any who can claim to be rich. None is in debt. Twelve automobiles are owned by residents of the village. Everybody appears happy and contented with life.—Exchange.

"Holding Together."

In the preface to "The Glass of Fashion" reference is made to a letter written by the artist, Burne-Jones, to Mary Gladstone. This idealist broke forth into lamentation over the quarrels and trivial animosities which too often exist between men of genius.

"My dear," he exclaims, "if twelve of these men would hold together for ten years, the whole world aspect would now be changed, and twelve men did once hold together and the whole face of the world was changed."

Why cannot this wise comment be applied to the existing groups in any city and village—i. e., to its churches, its schools, its lodges, its clubs and what not? How great would be the good to individual and community! The very fact of communities "holding together" would itself be the millennium.—Correspondence Chicago Daily News.

Harmonics were much used by the player, who presented a dull concerto by the famous double bass player, Kussovitzky.

GOOD JOKE ON DANISH KING

Monarch Jumped Too Quickly to Conclusion That Eskimo Was Actuated by Loyalty.

An amusing story of the king of Denmark's recent visit to Greenland was recently told by M. Aagaard of the Danish legation, to members of the Danish club in London.

As the royal yacht was approaching Greenland a dark speck became visible on the open sea. It proved to be a solitary Eskimo in his little cayak (native canoe). The Eskimo came on board and his loyalty in having braved the perils of the sea in such a frail craft assured him the warmest of welcomes. The king presented him with a cigar and, what the Eskimos most highly prize, a rifle.

On landing, the king described the incident to the Danish commissioner in Greenland and asked him who the man was.

The commissioner, in accents of horror, replied: "The man's an escaped convict. He broke prison yesterday, stole a canoe and put to sea. We thought he had been drowned."

Thousands of women have kidney and bladder trouble and never suspect it. Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased. Pain in the back, headache, loss of ambition, nervousness, are often times symptoms of kidney trouble.

Don't delay starting treatment. Dr. Kilmor's Swamp-Root, a physician's prescription, obtained at any drug store, may be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

"Got a car at last."

One third of your life is allotted to sleep. Do you get your share?

The most important period in the process of applying nutrition to the repair of the body is while you are asleep. For the most favorable transformation of digested food into nerve and cell tissue, so doctors tell us, sleep is absolutely essential.

Is it any wonder that those who suffer from lack of proper sleep are weak, pale and lacking in energy or ambition?

One of the causes of insomnia is nerve-irritation from tea and coffee drinking. Tea and coffee both contain caffeine, which has a tendency to cause undue stimulation. The irritating effect of caffeine often results in insomnia, depression, and a weakened nervous system.

You can easily overcome these troubles by drinking Postum instead of tea or coffee. Postum is a delicious, satisfying cereal beverage, and it is absolutely free from caffeine, or any other harmful substance.

Ask your grocer for Postum. Drink this delicious, refreshing beverage for ten days. Then see if you do not feel better and more clear headed, and if you do not sleep better at night—as so many other people have proved for themselves.

Postum comes in two forms: Instant Postum (in tins) made instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages of larger bulk, for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared) made by boiling for 20 minutes.

As the Editor Sees It

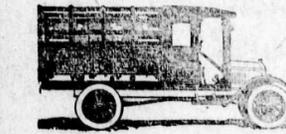

Pay More Attention to Politics
 An autocratic government is expected to run itself without any attention on the part of the governed. A democratic government is different. It calls for time and effort from the citizens. If we really believe in government of the people, for the people, we must be prepared to put some time into politics, even if it does mean work.

Join a Party! Be Something!
 At a recent meeting of postal employees, President Harding declared that he would rather have a hard-boiled Democrat than a yellow Republican, and he wouldn't give a rap for a postmaster who did not take enough interest in his government to be affiliated with a party. This probably meets the approval of everybody except the civil service amalgamation of spineless wonders. — Glenwood News-Press (Ark.)

Automobile Prices
 Tuckerton people have been listening with quickened ear recently to the many announcements of declines in the price of autos. For the auto has become a necessary part of business these days and even though we may not own one, we nevertheless recognize that they cut quite a figure in our everyday life. The whole business of life and a large part of pleasure is pretty closely linked with the automobile, and the prices, therefore, become fundamental and of general interest. We have to have the cars, and their cost has a bearing on the things we eat and wear, because they have come to be classed as public carriers, serving their purpose as well as the railroads serve theirs, and tying right in with the transportation of freight of every description. The announcement of cuts by almost every manufacturer of autos is very good news for everybody, because it means getting down to new standards and setting price scales which will have a bearing on other markets. So, whether the average man is interested directly in the purchase of an auto or not, he is justified in taking an interest in every announcement of a cut in the price of them.

The Gossip Box
 We promised we wouldn't reveal any names, but we heard a certain Tuckerton woman telling a few days ago about a new plan her family has adopted which we believe would be a good idea for other families to emulate. She says the first of the year her family established what they call a "gossip box." It is a little tin box with a slot cut in the top, just large enough to permit a dime to be dropped through. They agreed, this woman, her husband and their two children, that every time they said anything unkind about anyone else the one making the remark would drop a dime into the box. "Formerly," she says, "we never finished a meal but what someone came into our conversation. And before long we found that we were doing a good deal of gossiping around the table. We've all had to drop our dimes into it at times, but lately we have learned to guard our conversation, and if we can't say something nice about those we are talking about, we just remember the box, and keep a silent tongue. Next Christmas we will take the proceeds of the gossip box and give it to the church." A fine idea, for if there is anything we should strive to discourage it is gossiping. For gossiping soon becomes chronic and the gossip, without possibly meaning any harm, sets afloat rumors that besmirch the character forever of some mighty fine people. Why not talk it over with your family, and see if there isn't a little room for a "gossip box" in your own home?

FISHERMEN AGREE ON BILL CHANGES
 Atlantic City, N. J., Feb. 2.—Senator W. P. White today met a committee from the Fishermen's Protective Association, Baymen's Protective Association, with Mayor Champion, of Ocean City, and S. P. Leeds, president of the Atlantic City chamber of commerce, to discuss a compromise on his fishing bill introduced in the senate at this session.

The fishermen objected to the time they were restricted from fishing in the bays. Senator White suggested that the compromise be the changing of the period of May 1 to September 15 to that of June 15 to September 1. This was agreed upon, and the bill will be voted upon with these alterations.

Another matter taken up was an amendment to the Mullica river bill of 1914. The time on this it was agreed to change from May 1 to June 15.

Harold Morey and William Rider of the Coast Guard Stations, were visitors at their homes here during the week.

Miss Rhoda Lippincott, who is attending Columbia University, at New York, visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. N. Lippincott, on North Wood street, during the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Andrews, of Atlantic City, were Sunday visitors with Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Falkenburg.

Rev. Daniel Johnson, Capt. and Mrs. Samuel G. Higbee and Mrs. Roxanna Atkinson, were among those who attended the all-day services at Port Republic, last week.

James E. Otis, daughter, Miss Mary and son, Sterling are spending the winter in Florida. Sterling, in company with Ambrose Cox, of Barnegat, who is also wintering in Florida, have extended their trip and taken in a trip to Cuba.

Mrs. J. Edw. Kelley was a visitor in Philadelphia last week.

W. R. McDaniels is visiting his daughter, Mrs. Robert Brittain in Philadelphia. He was accompanied by another daughter, Mrs. Anna McDaniels, who returned home this week.

Mrs. Calvin Falkenburg spent Monday and Tuesday in Philadelphia.

We are very glad to report that Henry Truex is able to be out after a recent serious attack of appendicitis.

More snow! On Monday the barometer registered wet weather ahead and many thought it a little off considering how beautifully the weather was clearing—the sun never looked more fair—but, the next day, there was the proof that the barometer knew its business for the ground was covered with about three inches of snow.

Rev. and Mrs. Elwood C. Hoey are the proud parents of a new baby girl, born January 31, christened Florence Mabel. Mr. Hoey is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Hoey, of this place.

Farmers and fruit growers who have suffered heavy losses through raids on their fields and orchards by thieving automobile parties would no doubt welcome the passage of a law in New Jersey similar to the one introduced in the New York legislature.

This law provides for the revocation of the license of any automobilist convicted of stealing any kind of farm produce. This would effectually put a stop to such depredations.

No doubt there are many who would take a chance of a small fine for committing such thefts but who would not run the risk of losing their auto licenses.

Mrs. Maggie Ferguson of Philadelphia and John Miller of Watsontown, N. J., were recent visitors with Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Miller, the former a sister and the latter a son of Mrs. Miller, who has been very seriously ill but is now improving.

HARRIET and the PIPER

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

Copyright by Kathleen Norris

DANCE—AND PAY THE PIPER

My proposition is that you and I are quietly married tomorrow; you come back tomorrow night and announce it whenever you see fit. I may seem a little matter-of-fact about this, Miss Field, but I am hoping you understand. I am making you an unsentimental business offer. I need you in my life and I offer you certain advantages which it would be silly and schoolboyish for me to deny I possess. I have a certain standing in the community which even Mrs. Carter's madness has not seemed to impair seriously. The boy and the girl both love you, and you have my warmest friendship. Your position in my household will be as free and independent as was Mrs. Carter's. I do not know whether you will consider this a fair return for what I ask, for after all you are giving your services for life to the Carter household—

Here you have a situation full of dramatic possibilities. Richard Carter, wealthy, distinguished, the father of Nina, 17, and Ward, 24, is proposing a marriage of convenience to Harriet Field, 28, and beautiful. She has been the social secretary of Mrs. Carter, who eloped, was divorced and died. Mr. Carter wants Harriet's capable hand at the head of his household affairs.

These affairs are complicated enough to be decidedly interesting. Royal Blondin, an attractive adventurer, has fascinated Nina. Ward wants to marry Harriet. Blondin has a hold on Harriet because of past relations between them. And Harriet, a nice girl with a conscience, is secretly in love with Richard Carter. So Harriet, who has danced, has many ways in which to pay the Piper. The question is: How does she pay? And a very interesting question it is.

It's especially interesting because Kathleen Norris answers it. She's been writing since 1910 and has won a wide public with a dozen or so popular novels. She is quite modern and up-to-date and this story is illuminating as to social conditions—besides being a fascinating love story.

CHAPTER I.

Richard Carter had called the place "Crowlands," not to please himself, or even his wife. But it was to his mother's newly born family pride that the idea of being the Carters of Crowlands made its appeal. The estate, when he bought it, had belonged to a Carter, and the tradition was that two hundred years before it had been a grant of the first George to the first of the name in America. Madame Carter, as the old lady liked to be called, immediately adopted the unknown owner into a vague cousinship, spoke of him as "a kinsman of ours," and proceeded to tell old friends that Crowlands had always been "in the family."

It was a home of creamy brick, colonial in design, and set in splendid lawns and great trees on the bank of the blue Hudson. White driveways circled it, great stables and garages across a curve of green meadows had their own invisible domain, and on the shining highway there was a full mile of high brick fence, a marching line of great maples and sycamores, and a demure lodge beside the mighty iron gates.

On one of the wide benches that were placed here and there on the descending terraces, in the late hours of an exquisite summer afternoon, Isabelle Carter had seated herself, and Anthony Pope, her cavalier, had thrown himself on the steps at her feet.

She was a woman worthy of the exquisite setting, and might well have turned an older head than that of the boy beside her. Brunette, with smooth cheeks deeply touched with rose, black eyes, and a warmly crimson mouth that could be at once provocative and relentless, she glowed like a flower herself in the sweet and enervating heat of the summer's first warm day. She was the tiniest of women, and the little foot, that, in its transparent silk stocking and buckled slipper, was close to Anthony's hand, was like a child's.

The man was twice her size, and as dark as she, earnest, eager, and today with a troubled expression clouding his face. It was to banish that look, if she might, that Isabelle had deliberately stopped him here.

She had been behaving badly toward him, and in her rather irresponsible and shallow way she was sorry for it. Isabelle was a famous flirt, her husband knew it, everyone knew it. There was always some man paying desperate court to her, and always half-a-dozen other men who were eager to be in his place. Isabelle lived for this, went from one adventure to another with the naive confidence of a woman whose husband smiles upon her playing, and whose position is impregnable.

But this boy, this Anthony, was different. In the first place he was young—but twenty-six. In the second place he was, or had been, her own son's closest friend. Ward Carter was twenty-two, and his mother nineteen years older.

Anthony was young, and he was absurd, but he did not know it, and Isabelle began to feel the difficulty of keeping the whole world from discovering it before he did. He made no secret of his passion. He came straight to her in any company; he never looked at anybody else. To her own daughter Nina, seventeen years old, his attitude was almost paternal; he ignored Ward as if their friendship had never been.

Isabelle saw that she had made a mistake. She should have killed this affair at the very beginning. Tony was not like the older men, willing to play the game with just a little scorching of fingers. Appearances meant nothing to Tony, and she had let the play go too far now to convince him that she did not return something of his feeling.

She looked down at him now, content to be alone with her and at her feet, and a hundred mixed emotions stirred her. His feeling for her was not only pitiable and absurd in him, but it was rapidly reaching the point when it would make her absurd and pitiable, too. Nina, instinctively scenting the affair, had already expressed herself as "hating that idiot." Ward had scowled, of late, at the mere mention of Tony's name. Even her husband, the patient Richard, seeing the youth ensconce himself firmly beside her in the limousine, had had aside his mild comment: "Is this young man a fixture in our family, dear?"

"You should be playing tennis, Tony," said Isabelle.

"Tennis!" A look of distaste crossed Anthony's face.

"Please—Cherie!" he begged.

There was a silence brimming with sweetness and color. Tony laid his hand against her knee, groped until her own warm, smooth fingers were in his own.

"Does Mr. Carter play golf tomorrow?" he asked, presently.

"I suppose so."

"Oh, and you—what do you do?"

"Oh, I have a full day! People to lunch, friends of Madame Carter—"

"I knew you'd say that!" he said.

"Now, I'll tell you about tomorrow. You and I are going to slip away, at about one o'clock, and go off in the gray car. We'll go up to—well, somewhere, and we'll have our lunch under the trees. We'll be back at about four, for the tea callers, and they may have you until I come back for dinner. After dinner we'll walk on the terrace—as we did two wonderful, wonderful nights ago, and perhaps—"

His voice had fallen to a rich and tender note, his eyes were rapt. "Perhaps," he said, "just before we go in, at the end of the terrace, you'll look up at the stars again—"

"Tony!" Isabelle interrupted, her face brilliant with color. "My dear boy—my dear boy, think where this is going to end. In all reason—in all reason—"

"Isabelle, what in God's name has reason to do with it!" He knelt before her, and caught her hands, and Isabelle had a terrified fear that what she was saying was a prayer, and she might start up or down the terrace steps and see him. "The instant you realize what you and I are to each other, my darling," he said, "you begin to talk of reason. Love isn't reason, Cherie. It's the divinest unreason in the world! Cherie, there's never been another woman for me; there never will be! I can't live without you; I don't want to! You're frightened now, you don't know how we can manage it. But I'll find the way. The only thing that matters is that you must belong to me—you shall belong to me—as I to you in every fiber of my being—"

"Tony—for Heaven's sake!" Isabelle was in an agony. Somebody was approaching. He had gotten to his feet, and was gloomily staring at the river, when Nina Carter, followed by a great white Russian hound, came flying down the steps.

"Mother—"

the sweet summer world was in silence again.

Isabelle sat on, stroking the hound, her soul filled with perplexity. Anthony's eloquent back gave her sudden understanding of his fury. "Ah, please, Tony," she pleaded, "what can I do?"

"Nothing!" he answered, suddenly piliant. "Nothing, of course." And he turned to her a boyish face stern with pain. "Of course you can do nothing, Cherie. I'm not such a—such a fool—" his voice broke angrily—"that I can't see that! Come on, we'll go up and have tea—with the Bellamys. And I—I'll be going tonight. I'll say good-by to you now—and perhaps you'll be good enough to make my good-bys to the others—"

The youthfulness of it did not rob it of real dignity. Isabelle, wretchedly mounting the steps beside him, felt her heart contract with real pain. He would go away—it would all be over and forgotten in a few weeks—and yet, how she longed to comfort him, to make him happy again!

She looked obliquely at his set face, and what she saw there made her feel ashamed.

On the bright level of the upper terrace ten was merrily in progress. Miss Field had duly come down to preside, and all was well. Isabelle, as she dropped into a chair, gave a sigh of relief; everyone was amused and absorbed and happy. Everyone, that is, except the magnificent and sharp-eyed old lady who sat, regally throned, near her, and favored her immediately with a disapproving look. Old Madame Carter had her own good reasons for being angry, and she never spared any one available from participation in her mood.

She was remarkably handsome, even at seventy-five; with a crown of puffed white hair, gold-rimmed eye-glasses, and an erect and finely preserved figure. Her voice was theatrically deep and clear, and her manner vigorous and impressive.

"Well, my dear, your friends were naturally wondering what important matter kept their hostess away from her guests," she began, Isabelle shrugged and smiled carelessly, with an indifferent glance at the group.

"Harriet is managing very nicely," she said, contentedly, as Tony, with a somber face and averted eyes, brought her her tea.

"So Ward seems to think," observed Ward's grandmother with acidity. Isabelle laughed indifferently. Her son, she was a master of the art of keeping silent, this young woman, and but for her beauty she might have been as inconspicuous as she sincerely tried to be. But her simple gowns and her plainly massed hair only served to emphasize the extraordinary distinction of her appearance, and her utmost effort to obliterate herself could not quite keep her from notice. Old Mrs. Carter, who for reasons perfectly comprehensible in an old lady who had once been handsome herself, detested Harriet, and said to her daughter-in-law that in her opinion there was something queer about the girl.

She was of that always-arresting type that combines a warm dusky skin with blue eyes and fair hair. The eyes, in her case, were a soft smoky blue, set in thick and inky black lashes, and the hair was brassy gold, banded carelessly but trimly about her rather broad forehead. Her mouth was wide, deep crimson, thin-lipped; it was a mouth of secrets and of mystery, of character, a mouth that had known the trembling of pain and grief, perhaps, but a firm mouth now, and a beautiful one.

Looking at her, an artist would have fancied her a bold and charming and boyish-looking little girl, fifteen years ago, with that Greek chin and that tawny mane; would have seen her sexless and splendid in her early teens, and a romancer might have wondered what paths had led her, in the superb realization of her beautiful womanhood, at twenty-seven, to this subordinate position in the home of a self-made rich man, and this conventional tea table on a terrace over the Hudson.

"Nearly half-past five, Nina," she said, presently. "Go and change and brush, that's a darling! You look rather tumbled."

Nina, reaching for a maroon, obediently wandered away, and immediately the empty chair beside Harriet was taken by a newcomer, Richard Carter himself, the owner of all this smiling estate, who had come up from the little launch at the landing, had changed hastily into white flannels, Harriet saw at a glance, and had unexpectedly joined them for tea.

"Ten, Mr. Carter?" Harriet ventured.

He was watching his wife with a sort of idle interest. She had to repeat his invitation.

"If you please, Miss Field! Tea sounded right, somehow, to me today. It's been a terrible day!"

"I can imagine it!" Harriet's voice was pleasantly commonplace. But the moment had its thrill for her. This lean, tall, tired man, with his abstract nervous, clever hands, loomed in oddly manner, his perfunctory courtesies, his heroic proportions in Harriet's life.

Isabelle knew all about Aunt Georgina, and she looked wearily away. "The Bellamys are coming in for awhile," she observed, with deliberate irrelevance, "and I hope they'll bring their Swami—or whatever he is, with them. He must be a queer creature."

"He's not a Swami, he's an artist," Tony said, drawn into a casual conversation much against his will. "Blondin—I've met him. I can't bear him, he makes me sick!"

He relapsed into gloomy silence, and Isabelle put into her laugh something affectionate and soothing.

"He evidently lives by his wits," she suggested, "which is something you have never had to do!"

Tony scowled again. It was part of his charm for her that he was the spoiled darling of fortune. Handsome and young, and with no family ties to restrain him, he had recently come into his own enormous fortune. His manner with servants, his ready check book, his easy French, and his unruffled self-confidence in any imaginable contingency, coupled with his youth, had strong attraction for a woman conscious of the financial restrictions of her own early years and the limitations of her public-school education.

"Why don't you go to the club and dress now, and come back and dine with us?" she said, in an undertone.

"Do you want me?" he asked, sulkily.

"I'm asking you!"

For answer he stood up, and smiled wistfully down upon her, with a hesitancy she knew well how to interpret in his eyes. He had been longing so thirstily for just that permission, and she had been yearning so to give it! Happiness came back into both their hearts as he turned to go, and she gave him just a quick touch of a warm little hand in farewell.

Other guests had come in, and Miss Field was extremely busy, and Ward, helping her officially, was busy, too. "Fun to have you down here!" he said, in her ear.

Harriet Field had an aside with a maid regarding hot water. Then she gave Ward an indulgent, an older-sisterly glance. He was in years almost twenty-two, but in twenty-seven the young woman felt him ages her junior. He was a joyous, irresponsible boy, and he and his mother's secretary had always been good friends since the day, four years ago now, when the silent, somewhat grave Harriet Field had first made her appearance in the family. The young people loved her; Richard Carter occasionally said to his wife, "Very clever—very pretty girl!" which was perhaps as close as he ever got to any domestic matter, and Isabelle confided to her almost all her duties and cares. Nina, insatiably curious, had gathered no more than that Miss Harriet's father had been a college professor of languages, and that her only relative was a married sister, Linda, much older, who had four children, and lived in New Jersey.

Harriet was a master of the art of keeping silent, this young woman, and but for her beauty she might have been as inconspicuous as she sincerely tried to be. But her simple gowns and her plainly massed hair only served to emphasize the extraordinary distinction of her appearance, and her utmost effort to obliterate herself could not quite keep her from notice. "Ten, Mr. Carter?" Harriet ventured.

He was watching his wife with a sort of idle interest. She had to repeat his invitation.

"If you please, Miss Field! Tea sounded right, somehow, to me today. It's been a terrible day!"

"I can imagine it!" Harriet's voice was pleasantly commonplace. But the moment had its thrill for her. This lean, tall, tired man, with his abstract nervous, clever hands, loomed in oddly manner, his perfunctory courtesies, his heroic proportions in Harriet's life.

Isabelle knew all about Aunt Georgina, and she looked wearily away. "The Bellamys are coming in for awhile," she observed, with deliberate irrelevance, "and I hope they'll bring their Swami—or whatever he is, with them. He must be a queer creature."

"He's not a Swami, he's an artist," Tony said, drawn into a casual conversation much against his will. "Blondin—I've met him. I can't bear him, he makes me sick!"

He relapsed into gloomy silence, and Isabelle put into her laugh something affectionate and soothing.

"He evidently lives by his wits," she suggested, "which is something you have never had to do!"

Tony scowled again. It was part of his charm for her that he was the spoiled darling of fortune. Handsome and young, and with no family ties to restrain him, he had recently come into his own enormous fortune. His manner with servants, his ready check book, his easy French, and his unruffled self-confidence in any imaginable contingency, coupled with his youth, had strong attraction for a woman conscious of the financial restrictions of her own early years and the limitations of her public-school education.

"Why don't you go to the club and dress now, and come back and dine with us?" she said, in an undertone.

"Do you want me?" he asked, sulkily.

His face was keen and somewhat lined under a smooth crest of slightly graying hair; he smiled very rarely, but there was a certain kindness in his gray eyes, when Nina or Ward or his wife turned to him, that Harriet liked.

For Harriet he had hardly a dozen words a year. He merely smiled kindly when she thanked him for the Christmas gift that bore his untouched card; if she went to her sister for a day or two, he gave her only a nod of greeting when she came back. Now and then he asked with sharp interest about Nina's teeth or his mother's headache.

But Harriet had known other types of men, and for his very silences, for his indifference, she had begun to admire him long ago. She had not been born in this atmosphere of pleasure and ease and riches; she was not entirely unfitted to judge a man.

Isabelle was always breezily civil to her husband; he had long ago vanished as completely from among the vital elements of her life as if he were dead, perhaps more than if he were dead. She thought—if she thought about him at all—that he never saw her little affairs; she supposed him perfectly satisfied with his home and children and club and business, and incidentally with his beautiful figurehead of a wife. They had quarreled distressingly, several years ago, when he had bored her with references to her "duty," and her influence over Nina, and her obligations to her true self. But that had all stopped long since, and now Isabelle was free to sleep late, to dress at leisure, to make what engagements she pleased, to see the persons who interested her. Richard never interfered; never was there a more perfectly discreet and generous husband. Half the women Isabelle knew were attempting to live exactly as she did, to cultivate "suitors," and drift about in an atmosphere of new gowns and adulation and orchids and softly lighted drawing rooms, and incessant playing with fire; it was the accepted thing, in Isabelle's circle, and that she was more successful in it than other women was not at all to her discredit.

INTEREST has not been centered so much during the past few seasons on the graceful long-line dresses that have won the devotion of women as on their decoration. Fabrics have been still less important, but the coming of spring will change all this, so the fashion prophets say—it is to be a colorful season and its rosy dawn is painting the horizon with many hues. There is no reason to think that the silhouette will be changed, but even in such durable and usually sedate

DIET STANDARDS OF YOUNG CHILD

Campaign Inaugurated at Akron, O., Where 1,011 Children Were Measured.

BALANCED MEALS EXPLAINED

Boys and Girls Who Had Largest Underweight Percentages Selected for Physical Examinations—Health Habits Recorded.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A campaign to improve the diet standards of children of school age was recently conducted in Akron, O. As a preliminary step 1,011 children were weighed and measured under the direction of school authorities. Of these children 58 per cent were underweight, nearly a fourth of those being more than 10 per cent underweight. On the suggestion of the home demonstration agent of the United States Department of Agriculture and State Agricultural college the children were given one-half pint of milk in the middle of the morning and the other underweight children were merely taught how to improve their weight themselves. At the close of the second month it was found that 67 per cent of all the children underweight had made some gain.

Plan Balanced Meals.

At this time the agent met with the mothers of these children to demonstrate the results of improved diet and to explain how to plan balanced meals. In this demonstration 60 boys and girls who had the largest underweight percentages were selected for physical examinations, made by a physician in the presence of parents. Each mother was told what the proper average weight for age and height is. She was given a health card on which to record her child's health habits for a week. The record was to show the number of hours of sleep daily and a complete diet list, which was to be filled out and used according to instructions given by the home demonstration agent. Other health habits, such as deep breathing and teeth brushing, were also to be recorded.

Weekly conferences follow. The demonstration was followed by weekly conferences of the mothers of the underweight children with the doctor, nurse, and home demonstration agent, at which the health record for the week was examined, the weekly weights taken, and additional instruction and advice given the parents. As a result almost every mother reported intelligent interest on the part of the children in the food work.

"We never sit down to the table but that the question arises as to whether or not we are having the right things to eat," said one mother in speaking of the excellent results achieved through this piece of nutrition work.

COOKING YOUNG COTTONTAILS

Meat May Be Satisfactorily Substituted for Beef in Goulish and Other Mixtures.

Young cottontail or other rabbits may be cooked in any of the ways chicken is prepared, and their meat may be satisfactorily substituted for beef or mutton in goulish and other stewed mixtures of meat and vegetables. The United States Department of Agriculture has thoroughly tested the following recipe for jugged hare: Belgian hair, jack rabbit, or wild rabbit may be used.

Clean the hare, remove the tough skin and membranes covering meat. Cut into pieces of about 2-inch lengths; cut ½ pound of bacon into dice of about half an inch square. In a plate mix 3 tablespoonfuls salt, 1 tablespoonful black pepper, 4 teaspoonfuls flour, ½ teaspoonful thyme, 1 bay leaf broken or crushed, 3 teaspoonfuls finely chopped onions, 3 teaspoonfuls grated nutmeg, and a pinch of ground cloves. Roll the diced bacon and one-fourth of the meat of the hare in this mixture. In a saucepan melt 2 tablespoonfuls of butter, or lard and butter mixed; when hot add the bacon and all the meat, brown nicely, add a little hot water or soup stock and simmer for ½ hour.

Dust Them.
A soft piece of old silk should be kept at hand for use in dusting your hat. Quills and ostrich should be gently dusted after each wearing.

Yeast.
A cake of yeast will keep fresh quite a long while if buried in salt.

Mop Stick.
Cut the old mop stick off at a convenient place, blind a number of old black stockings on, and use it to clean your stove.

Well-Made Lemon Pie Is Economical and Good

What dessert could be more tempting than a perfectly browned lemon pie? The following recipe, tested in the experimental kitchen of the United States Department of Agriculture, can be relied upon:

- 2 tablespoonfuls Speck of salt
- cornstarch. (about 1-1/2 tea-
- spoonfuls)
- 1 cupful sugar. (spoonful)
- 1 cupful boiling Grated rind of
- water. half a lemon.
- 4 tablespoonfuls 2 egg whites and
- lemon juice. 2 tablespoonfuls
- 1 tablespoonful sugar for me-
- butter. (spoonful)
- 2 egg yolks.

Mix the cornstarch and sugar in a saucepan and stir in the hot water. Cook, stirring constantly, until it thickens, and boil five minutes. Add butter, well-beaten yolks, salt, lemon juice, grated rind. Cook about one minute longer. Pour into crust previously baked. Cover with a meringue made of the egg whites beaten stiff, then with two tablespoonfuls of sugar; and brown in oven.

MAKE BED PROPERLY IS MOST ESSENTIAL

Club Girls Encouraged to Care for Their Own Rooms.

Comfort Depends Largely on Tucking in Under Sheet So That It Remains Smooth and Straight—Make Mitered Corners.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Not every woman knows how to make a bed properly, although her linen closet may be envily well filled with all the necessary sheets, pillowcases, and coverings. The home demonstration agents of the United States Department of Agriculture and the State Agricultural colleges are encouraging clubs of girls to furnish and care for their own rooms, and these are the directions they give for correct bed making:

First, straighten the mattress pad so that it lies smooth and without wrinkles. Over this spread the under sheet, right side up, with the wide hem at the head and the center of the sheet to the center of the bed. The comfort of a bed depends in a large measure on tucking in the under sheet so securely that it remains smooth and straight. Making mitered corners is one of the best ways of doing this, and any person who has had nurses' training can quickly show you how to make them. Next, put on the upper sheet, right side down, and allowing for a generous turnover at the head tuck it in at the foot, using mitered corners. Then, put on the blankets so that their top edge comes about 9 inches below the head of the bed; turn the upper sheet back and tuck in all edges. Last of all, put on the spread, draw it smooth and straight, and arrange the pillows.

HOW TO CLEAN FURS AT HOME

Wash in Gasoline or in Suds Made With Castile Soap—Hang Out Doors to Dry.

Furs may be cleaned by washing in gasoline or in suds made with castile soap and a little borax, followed by several rinsings in clear water, is a helpful suggestion from the Biological Survey, United States Department of Agriculture. It is best to hang them out of doors to dry. When dry or nearly so, they require to be stretched and rubbed on the flesh side to make them pliable again.

Fur garments may be brightened by sponging them with gasoline and then rubbing corn meal into the fur while it is still damp to take up the particles of dirt that have been loosened. Gasoline should never be used, of course, where its fumes can come in contact with fire.

Another way of cleaning fur especially is by means of naphthalene crystals thoroughly rubbed into it. The pulverized crystals and the dirt which has been dislodged may be removed by whipping, brushing with a whisk broom, or by a vacuum cleaner.

OF INTEREST TO THE HOUSEWIFE

To keep on pumps, sew a piece of chamouis to the lining inside the heel.

Ammonia will remove iodine stains.

Before putting on the top crust of your apple pie, add a few cut dates.

Hardwood floors occasionally should be wiped with a cloth and clear water.

You'll get the best results if you wash cream slowly for the first two minutes and then beat very rapidly.

Garbage pails should be emptied daily and then rinsed in cold water. Once a week scald with hot soda water and scrub well, then dry.

A little white sugar dissolved in hot water makes a good stiffening for delicate laces.

A touch of oil or vaseline at the hinged points of umbrella rods will prevent the rusting and breaking of the small wires that hold the ribs together.

Before putting aprons and dresses into the wash, brush pockets with whisk broom. They will be easier to wash and come out cleaner.

Rag rugs made of cotton wash well. These are inexpensive and are often just the thing for the kitchen, as well as other parts of the house.

FEEDING CATTLE IS GOOD PLAN FOR MARKETING VARIOUS CROPS

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Although corn belt cattle feeders have lost money the last two years, yet on the average for five years or more the industry has been profitable on many farms and is a line of production which will continue to be an important branch of American agriculture.

The bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture, has recently issued Farmer's Bulletin No. 1218, "Beef Production in the Corn Belt," which contains valuable suggestions to the corn belt feeders on the economical production of beef.

The investigations on which the bulletin is based were conducted by the department on 906 farms of the corn belt and every phase of the problem, from raising calves or buying feeders to the marketing of the finished steer, is treated in considerable detail.

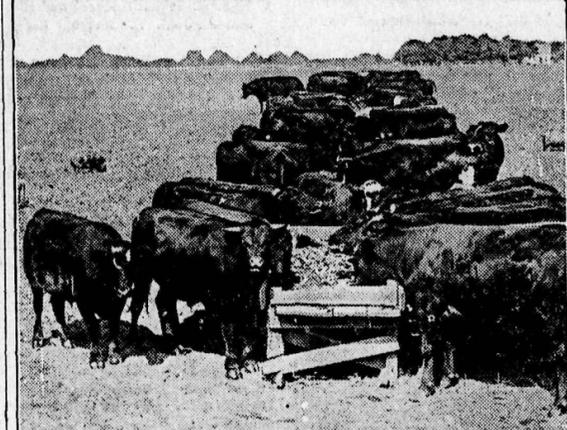

The general tendency in the corn belt to plow up permanent pastures of gals, whereas yearlings use six to eight pounds, and calves only four to six pounds.

Feeding cattle for the market is simply one method of marketing the crops. On 287 farms in the corn belt an average of 35 per cent of the 1919 crops was fed to cattle. Fully 90 per cent of the fattened cattle in this area are dry-lot fed and are marketed before July 1. The various methods of feeding and the feeds used are fully discussed in the bulletin.

Feed Alfalfa and Clover Hay. Alfalfa and clover hay are by far the most popular dry roughages, as they take the place of commercial protein concentrates to a large extent. Grass hays, with the exception of timothy mixed with clover, are very little used. The use of stovers and straws has a direct bearing on the economy of gains, and all such feeds should be used on the farm.

The most popular protein concentrates in the corn belt are cottonseed meal and cake and linseed meal. Corn, and produce more cultivated crops caused a decline in beef raising, but the keeping of cows to raise calves has continued to be profitable on land too rough, too wet, or too infertile for cultivation. The reduction of pasture has been compensated for to some extent by the greater use of clover, alfalfa, and corn silage. However, since 1905 there has been some increase in feeder production in the corn belt due to the breaking up of western ranges for dry farming and irrigation.

The investigation, which was carried on for three years, showed that the feed cost of keeping a cow was 60 per cent of the entire cost of maintenance for a year, while 31 per cent represented interest, labor, equipment and incidentals. The total number of cows on the 906 farms was 23,258, an average of 25 to the farm. The per cent of calves raised was practically 85. It was found that costs could be reduced through three factors—increasing the credits from the cows, improving the herd, and economy in feeding.

Early Fall Buying of Feeders Best.

When feeders are not raised on the farm buying and selling ability plays an important part. In some seasons certain weights and classes of cattle may be purchased more economically than others. Ordinarily early fall buying is preferable, as competition between packers and feeders usually increases as winter approaches.

The higher the quality of the feeder steer the better use he will make of his feed, though he usually eats more of it. But this consideration should not cause the buyer to lose sight of the price. Fleishy feeders can often be used to advantage on short feeds, and when there are very good prospects for higher prices. The older the animal the quicker it will fatten, as it will use less feed for growth and more for fat production.

Mature feeders fatten in three to four months, two-year-olds in 5 to 7 months, yearlings in eight to ten months, and calves in ten to twelve months. Older cattle use roughages more advantageously, but in general young animals make more economical use of all feeds. Mature cattle require from nine to eleven pounds of digestible nutrients to make a pound of gain, whereas yearlings use six to eight pounds, and calves only four to six pounds.

concentrates most used. Molasses feed and other miscellaneous concentrates are in much demand in some sections. Supplying protein is of more concern to the cattle feeder than supplying the other constituents of the ration because it is usually purchased.

Cottonseed meal, while it is used more extensively throughout the corn belt as a whole, is no more popular than linseed meal. Most cattle feeders prefer linseed meal, but it is not used so largely owing to its somewhat higher cost. Corn makes up 90 per cent of the carbohydrate concentrates. Oats are frequently used in the latter part of the feeding period to put cattle in better shipping condition. Barley is used only in a small way, although in Illinois it made up 10 per cent of the grain ration.

Purchase Price Is Half of Cost.

In fattening a steer the combined operating expenses usually more than equal the original purchase price of the feeder. The factors considered in operating expenses are feed, labor, building and equipment, interest, marketing, insurance and taxes. Feed usually constitutes about 80 per cent of this expense. All the other items are generally balanced by the manure and pork credits.

The preceding paragraphs are a very brief outline of the investigation of beef production in the corn belt. Those interested in a thorough study of the various operations and cost figures should secure a copy of the bulletin, which can be obtained free from the department of agriculture.

STARTING TREE PLANTATIONS

Cottonwood and Willow Do Best With Cuttings of 12 to 14 Inches—Avoid Bruising.

Cottonwood and willow plantations are most easily started with cuttings. These are simply from 12 to 14-inch sections taken from the one or two-year-old twigs of living trees. The cuts should be made with a sharp tool, to avoid bruising the bark. Cuttings should be collected during early winter and buried in moist sand in a cool place until the time for planting.

CREOSOTE TREATMENT IS BEST FOR SHORT-LIVED FARM WOODS

Treated Posts Are Sign of Sound Judgment.

Large Saving Is Made in Replacement Where Short-Lived Timber Is Used—Decay Is Less Rapid in Northern States.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Although more expensive at the outset, creosoted posts are generally more economical to use than many kinds of untreated, short-lived woods, because of their much greater lasting qualities, the forest service of the United States Department of Agriculture has determined. The exceptions would be in remote localities with cheap wood and labor, and where it would be expensive to obtain creosote.

The large saving in the replacement charges, which ordinarily mount up so high in maintaining a fence, and the use of cheap and inferior kinds of woods in the first place, much more than offset the increased cost of thorough treatment with creosote. Treated posts are a good investment, and their use where lasting woods are scarce or expensive is a sign of sound judgment in farm management.

The best treatment is that which results in the deepest penetration into the wood with the least absorption of creosote. The butts of the posts should be placed for one to two hours in creosote heated to a temperature of 180 degrees to 220 degrees F. It is Important to treat the wood to a height of a foot above the proposed ground line. In the southern states the entire post should then be submerged into oil, at 80 degrees to 100 degrees F., for one or two hours, or for such a time as is necessary to get good penetration. In the North, where decay is less rapid, the hot treatment is applied only to the butts, which are allowed to remain for two or three hours in the cooling process, the tops being treated by painting or dipping in creosote.

Further information on creosoting fence posts will be found in Farmers' Bulletin 744, Preservative Treatment of Farm Timbers, available upon request from the Department of Agriculture.

Sowing Rape for Hogs.

It is well to sow at least two patches of rape, say two or three weeks apart; then when one field is pastured off the hogs can be turned into the other and the two fields thus be used alternately throughout the summer season.

Ewes Need Exercise.

The breeding ewes need exercise in winter. The health and vigor desired cannot be obtained by housing the animals too closely indoors.

WILL BE AT THE BARNEGAT OPERA HOUSE Thursday, February 16, 7 Reels "Black Beauty"

Black Beauty knew when danger threatened and when his human friends were vitally in need of all his strength and fleetness, but he did not know of the thrilling romance going on indoors.

Ginger, the chestnut mare, saw no way to run when the stable was burning around her, but she did hear Black Beauty's appealing whinny and saved her life.

Merrylegs, the shaggy family pony, had a more genial philosophy of life than Sir Oliver and Ginger, but the old hunter and the chestnut mare were scarcely to blame for their bitterness over what men had done to them.

Black Beauty could not see that storm and flood had smashed a hole in the center of the bridge, but with a sense not given to humans he knew something was wrong.

UNUSUAL STORY IS MADE INTO UNIQUE FILM PRODUCTION

Scarcely one out of each ten thousand books published in the nineteenth century is read or remembered by the present generation, but those that have retained their popularity are more firmly fixed in the affections of the public than any other publication can be. Time either effaces memories of books or hallows them. For this reason, stories that have stood the test of time are assured of extraordinary popularity when put into motion pictures.

Until now, the work which stands eighth in popularity among all the books in the world, after more than forty years, had not been visualized. There seemed to be almost insurmountable difficulties in the way. These have been triumphantly overcome by Vitagraph, however, and Anna Sewall's "Black Beauty," the famous "Autobiography of a Horse," will be shown at the Barnegat Theatre on Thursday, Feb. 16.

The film is unique in many respects and is filled with spectacular scenes. The fox hunt, the fire in the stables, the storm that washed the bridge away, the grand ballroom scene and the race between the horse and locomotive are some of the big moments in the picture. A score of horses used in the production necessitated the maintenance of blacksmith shop, harness makers, carriage maker and a large number of grooms, stable boys and the like during the making of the film.
