

Boy's Body in Lake: Father is Arrested

Accused in Slaying After Missing Henry Schmei Is Found in Pohatcong Swamp

Says Son Ran From Him After Telling of Punishment in School

John Schmei was arrested Tuesday night on a charge of "suspicion of murder" following the finding of the body of his son, Henry Schmei, eleven, who has been missing since May 8.

Henry's body was found Tuesday morning floating face downward in Pohatcong Lake, three hundred yards from his father's home by William Ryan, Marcel H. Wallenstein and O. J. Bauman, New York newspaper men and Job M. Smith of Tuckerton and was lying face down.

Schmei's arrest was made on a warrant obtained before Justice of the Peace Arthur C. King by John Kohrel, town marshal.

Schmei has several other children and three of these, his daughters, were sitting with him when he told of the events that preceded the disappearance of his son.

Schmei's story was told simply: "Henry came home late from school May 7. I asked what was the matter. He told me that he had taken my penknife and with three other boys had met a little girl and he said that one of the boys had threatened the little girl with the knife. He said the principal had heard of this and kept him in."

Sent Him to Chores "I told him and his brother Clarence to do their chores and I would attend to them later. About seven o'clock I called the boys. Both started towards me but when I went towards Henry, he ran. It made me mad to have my son run away from me and I kept after him until I decided he must come to me sooner or later."

"That was the last I saw of him. When he did not return by 9.30 I sent the other boy out to search for him and even next morning I was not alarmed as he had once staid out all night before."

It was generally believed in Tuckerton that the arrest of the father was made more as a precautionary measure than anything else, for it is said that there is no direct evidence against him.

It was said that an autopsy performed Tuesday failed to show the least sign of violence on the body.

The autopsy was performed by doctors, Joshua, Hilliard of Manahawkin; F. N. Bunnell of Barnegat and Herbert Willis of Beach Haven.

The condition of the body was such that it was hard to determine whether or not there had been foul play and several of the important organs were sent to Dr. W. H. Wadsworth, coroner's physician of Philadelphia. No official statement has been made of the result of the autopsy.

The body when found was in a deplorable condition, as turtles had eaten away all the flesh from the head and neck and the feet was badly discolored making it difficult to find marks of violence had there been any.

Just as we are going to press county officials are on the ground.

A coroner's inquest will be held tomorrow in Tuckerton at 2 o'clock.

BOOZE PEDLAR FINED $500

Tom Donofrio of Egg Harbor City, who has been supplying certain resorts and individuals in the lower part of the county with hooch, was caught last Saturday by Constable Edward Kelley of Toms River, and on Wednesday pleaded guilty. He was fined $500, and told a second offence would mean a jail sentence. He traveled in a motor truck, distributing his stuff.

SURF CITY TAKES TITLE TO MANY LOTS

The borough of Surf City has about completed the formula of taking title to nearly half the lots in that borough for unpaid taxes. The borough has in fact foreclosed a tax title against the former owners of these lots, thru its counsel, Judge Maja Leon Berry, in the chancery court. The taxes due on these lots aggregated $20,168.45, and the proceeds go back to 1904, when the lots in question were sold for taxes and bid in by the borough. The lots are part of the former Culver and Wright holdings, though both Culver and Wright have been dead for a long time.

The failure of these defendants to meet the amount of the taxes due on April 24 last, the date set by the chancery court, results in George C. Low, the master in chancery, giving to the borough title to the land, so that they can dispose of it in fee simple. This large amount of land on which the taxes were held back has long been the drawback that has prevented the growth of Surf City, in spite of the economical government and careful administration for borough affairs, it has enjoyed, largely through the efforts of the late Thomas Callahan and his family of boys, and of William H. Donahue, son-in-law of Mr. Callahan, and the few all-the-year-round residents in the borough.

Now that the borough is in position to dispose of these lots by selling them to people who will build homes on them and pay taxes, there is no reason why Surf City should not take its place along with the most progressive summer resorts on Long Beach.

More red blooded Americans needed, and fewer red minded socialists.

The men are not supposed to criticize women's clothes, their sole function is to pay for them.

Many hands that used to rock the cradle are now reaching across the bridge table to play partner's cards.

Internal revenue officers can sing on their raids, "Oft in the stilly night."

After we have celebrated all kinds of weeks and days, it might be well to have a Work Week.

"QUEEN OF SHEBA" to be at Barnegat May 30th and 31st.

PRIZE SPEAKING CONTEST

A prize speaking contest between the Freshman and Sophomore classes of the Tuckerton High School was held at the Palace Theatre Monday evening, May 22.

Narration, Humorous and Dramatic First Prize—Katherine Eckardt. Second Prize—Margaret Marshall. Honorable Mention—Eugenia Lane.

BLOOD POISON FOLLOWS BITE OF FINGER BY BARNEGAT BOY

Charles Bernard, a shoemaker, at Barnegat, on Monday had Everett, son of Curtis Cranmer of that place, arrested on the charge of biting him on the finger. The finger had then swollen to several times its normal size and physicians told Bernard it must be amputated or he would lose his hand from blood poison. The boy's father went his bail in the sum of $1000 before Justice King.

PRIZE SPEAKING CONTEST
A prize speaking contest between the Freshman and Sophomore classes of the Tuckerton High School was held at the Palace Theatre Monday evening, May 22.

Sixteen pupils took part and it was indeed a difficult problem for the judges to award the prizes of merit as every one of the pupils were in splendid shape. However the decisions were finally made by the judges Rev. Daniel Johnson, Rev. Theo. P. Price and E. Moss Mathis, were as follows:

Narration, Humorous and Dramatic First Prize—Katherine Eckardt. Second Prize—Margaret Marshall. Honorable Mention—Eugenia Lane.

EXERCISE OVER RED FIELDS OF CIVIL STRIFE

United States Marines Execute Strategic Movements in the Wilderness and Spottsylvania Where Great Battles of the Civil War Were Decided.

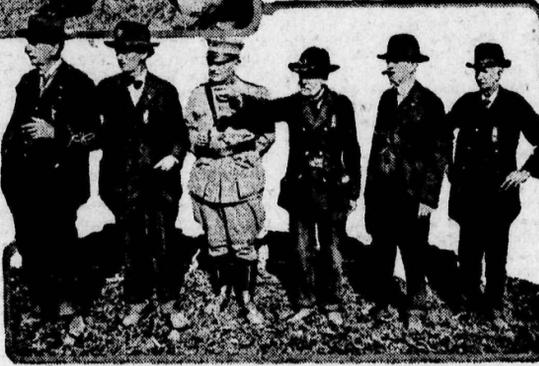

Veterans of '61" telling the Leathernecks how they "did it" over the same ground.

E. M. Jackson of Randall's battalion pointing out to General Lejeune where he and his comrades came over the top in '61.

Veteran of "61" explaining to an interested group of United States Marines the manner in which General Lee fought against Hooker in the battle of Chancellorsville in the Civil war, Wilderness Run being General Lee's line of defense.

LAST September United States Marines marched, skirmished, formed lines of battle, took up and abandoned positions, executed strategic movements, and made charges on the historic fields of the Wilderness and Spottsylvania. The pop and whiz of Springfield fire, the rip-rip of machine guns, the smash of field pieces and the crash of shell and bomb sounded through the shadowy woods, close tangles and across rolling, hilly fields near the Chancellor house, Wilderness church, Wilderness tavern, Parker's store, Dodd's tavern, Alsop's farm, and Bloody Angle, and along the Fredericksburg and Orange turnpike, the Plank road, the Brock road, and the banks of the Rapidan, and the smaller rivers, Ny and Po. Here on one of the bloodiest and ghostliest areas of the American Civil war the Marines held maneuvers. Four days were spent in the vicinity of Wilderness run, and those days were devoted to battle exercises and problems.

Where Stonewall Jackson Fell.

Three miles west of a western limit of Fredericksburg is Salem church. Five miles west of Salem church is Chancellorsville. One mile west of Chancellorsville is a little monument in the woods by the roadside which marks where Stonewall Jackson received the wound from which he died in a plain little farmhouse near Guinea station, 11 miles south of Fredericksburg. One mile west of the solemn little monument in its lonely site is Wilderness church. Three miles further on is the Wilderness tavern. Nine miles southwest of Fredericksburg, measured not by the road, but through the air, is Spottsylvania Courthouse, a village at a crossroads, where about 150 persons live.

About two miles northwest of the courthouse is a battle area once so strewn with dead and so littered with wounded men that for 50 years it has been called Bloody Angle, and that name will never be effaced from the tragic ground. Something more than a mile from Bloody Angle, at the fork of two old roads that are full of steep and bumpy hills and closely bordered by thick woods, is a monument that marks where General Sedgwick—Major General John Sedgwick, United States Volunteers, commanding the Sixth Army corps—a corps commander under Grant, was killed in action on the morning of May 9, 1864.

This description points out some of the landmarks, some of the "high spots," as it were, of a section of that country in which the battle of Fredericksburg was fought in December, 1862, in which the battles of Chancellorsville and Salem Church were fought in May, 1863, and in which the battles of the Wilderness and Spottsylvania Courthouse were fought in May, 1864—a little patch of country that has been appropriately called "the cockpit of America." In this section the Marines maneuvered and held field exercises in simulation of warfare. These are fields where the thinning, weakening, but gallant and intrepid Army of Northern Virginia and the vastly augmented and gallant Army of the Potomac fought and wallowed in dust, mud and blood in the spring of 1864. Grant, with overwhelming forces and resources, had begun to beat and hammer his way to Richmond and Appomattox, but those places were still one year away—a year of war.

Still the Wilderness.

If there are such things as ghosts there must be armies of them in this tangled-land, for many, many thousands of young men who wore the blue and many, many thousands of other young men who wore the gray were shot and bayoneted to death in this wild country. Much of that country west of Chancellorsville and northwest of Spottsylvania Courthouse, which was called the Wilderness before and during the Civil war, is still "the wilderness."

The winter of 1863-64 was one of great hardship and privation for the Confederate Army of Northern Virginia, as well as for other Confederate armies. The winter of 1864-65 was a Valley Forge winter for the southern troops. Gen. E. M. Law, C. S. A., writing of the Wilderness and Spottsylvania battles, said: "The Army of Northern Virginia had gained little in numbers during the winter (1863-64) and had never been so scantily fed and clothed. Equipment as to arms was good, but commissary and quartermaster supplies were scarce and poor." He says that nearly all the soldiers were ragged, barefooted and half-starved, "but the morale of the army was high and Grant knew that it was still a dangerous foe in battle."

Grant's plan of campaign was to put all the armies of the Union, east and west, into offensive operations at one time. He brought together scattered commands and built up the Army of the Potomac to a strength which he believed would overwhelm Lee, who faced him across the Rapidan astride the Orange and Alexandria railroad and maintained touch with the Richmond and Fredericksburg railroad 35 miles to the east. Grant believed that Lee had positions prepared on all the natural defensive lines from the Rapidan to the James. He planned to wear down the Army of Northern Virginia by successive attacks with superior numbers and at the time of the attacks to flank it out of one position after another. The greater size of the Army of the Potomac made this practicable. As they faced each other from opposite sides of the Rapidan, Grant planned to cross the river below the Confederate right, strike south for Richmond, and as the first point in the game force Lee to leave the strong position he occupied south of the Rapidan. Lee knew this.

Victory Long in Balance.

The fighting spread along a front of four or five miles. One side drove the other back, and then was driven back. Hancock's corps was driving Hill's fast. Gregg's Texans, only 800 strong, rushed against Webb's brigade of Hancock's corps, lost half their men in killed and wounded, but checked the Union advance in that part of the line, and Longstreet's corps, with Kershaw's division leading, was coming into line. Longstreet sent Mahone with several brigades—brigades were pitifully small then—around the Federal left, which had advanced far west of the Brock road, on which it had been marching south from Germanna ford. Mahone brought his men at right angles to the advancing federal left, attacked it, and it shivered back to the Brock road. There in the Wilderness the land was dotted with dead. Gravely wounded men died for want of surgical aid; died without the comfort of a cup of water. After the war the bones of thousands of men, unknown, were brought from the fields of Chancellorsville, Wilderness and Spottsylvania and buried in the Union and Confederate cemeteries at Fredericksburg and Spottsylvania, but woodchoppers, the cutters, hunters and farmers today come upon skulls and other relics of brave men who fell in the Wilderness.

Lee's plan had succeeded in part, failed in part. He had inflicted on Grant much heavier losses than he had sustained, but he had not hurled the Army of the Potomac into confusion and disorder.

Gallant Sedgwick's Death.

On May 8 Sedgwick and Warren's corps were thrown against Anderson and Early, and thrown back with heavy loss. The day of the 9th was spent in reconnoitering, intrenching, sniping, sharpshooting and small firing here and there along the lines as marching bodies became exposed within range. On the morning of the 9th Sedgwick was killed by a Confederate sharpshooter. The ball struck him in the left cheek beneath the eye. He had gone to an exposed part of the line. Shots were coming over now and then. He was warned, "Why," he answered, "they could not hit an elephant at that distance." He fell dead a minute later.

The Confederate lines were very irregular, adopting themselves to the broken contour of the land. At the north end of the position, two miles above the courthouse, was a salient that bulged northward for nearly a mile, and in places was half a mile across. From the east base of that salient the Confederate line ran three miles south to some high land above the Po river, a quarter of a mile east of Snells bridge.

The "Bloody Angle."

It was that salient which Grant picked as the place to break Lee's line and perhaps smash the army, and that salient came to be called "Bloody Angle." That point of the line was attacked in the morning of the 10th and the attack repulsed. Again, in the afternoon, the Union legions came at it, moving forward between the bodies of the men fallen in the morning. The Blue lines once more recoiled. News came to Lee that Hancock had crossed the Po near Shady Grove church and was passing to his rear. Mahone and Heth's division moved fast, attacked Hancock's rear division and drove Hancock back. Again news came that Grant was preparing to make a southward rush to reach the North Anna river first. Lee ordered back much of the artillery that defended the north salient and set the trains in motion. A false alarm.

The salient was again threatened. The men near the top of it went out into the field and brush before them and brought back muskets and cartridge boxes from the Union dead. Of course they brought back all the food found in the haversacks. Coffee and sugar were priceless luxuries. Bread and bacon were worth risking life for. A pair of shoes from a dead man! Why, the dead man had no use for them and many a soldier in the Army of Northern Virginia had not had shoes on his feet since the Gettysburg campaign the year before! These men bringing back Union muskets and ammunition from Union dead loaded all the muskets and lay down with perhaps half a dozen by their side. There were no repeating rifles and not many breech-loaders. Another attack on Bloody Angle was coming. The artillery that had been withdrawn was ordered back, but the attack came too soon. Some guns got back, but not in time to help much in repelling the attack.

Hand-to-Hand Struggle.

General Johnson, twenty guns and 2,800 men, nearly his whole division, were captured. Early's division came forward and the Blues were driven back. Another part of the salient was assailed and the line broken. General Perrin was killed. General Daniel was wounded. Lee was sending all available troops and the Confederate line was partly restored and all gaps closed. That was the 12th of May. All day and far into the night the fighting went on. At one part and then at another part of the salient it was hand-to-hand fighting. The Confederates constructed a shorter line in the rear of the salient and fell back to it on the 13th. Both armies had been marching and fighting since the 4th of May. There was a lull until the 18th, when two corps of Grant's army, the Second and Sixth, attacked again, but the Confederate line held and the attack cost Grant many men.

On the 19th strange things were happening. Grant was starting south to get between Lee and Richmond. A Confederate force moving around the Union right had got that information, but it cost them about a thousand men in killed and wounded to learn it. Hancock was leading the way to the south and to Richmond. The North Anna river, fifteen miles south of Spottsylvania was the immediate objective of both armies.

Spottsylvania was left behind and the North Anna river, Cold Harbor, Bethesda church and then the Chick-homina came into the red light of the history of the Civil war.

"ON EASY STREET"

Women "Farmerettes" Make Money in Western Canada.

Many Are Taking Advantage of the Opportunity Offered by the Fertile Land and Fine Climate.

In many parts of Western Canada are to be found women owning and running farms for themselves, and what is more, making them pay. May Hazlett, an English girl, who lived on a farm in the Touchwood hills, in Saskatchewan, for the past four years, looking after her stock and cultivating her land, is one of these. The farm was originally her brother's homestead, at which time Miss Hazlett was a stenographer. Her brother was killed while fighting with the Canadian forces at Vimy Ridge. Neighbors advised Miss Hazlett to sell the farm, but she decided that she was tired of the "eternal pounding" and became a farmerette.

Mrs. Mary J. Blackburn, a pioneer woman farmer of Alberta, has just added 100 acres to her farm near Hardisty. Coming from Eastern Canada, Mrs. Blackburn homesteaded a quarter section in 1902. She had two Holstein helpers, a bull, and $17 in cash. She lived in a tent the first summer and in a sod shack in the winter. Her first crop put her, as she tells the story, "on Easy street." In ten years she had a herd of 60 pure-bred Holstein cattle and was operating a prosperous dairy. A fine residence has supplanted the sod hut. "I milked my cows, raised my cattle, cut hay and stacked it all by myself," said Mrs. Blackburn. "I started on bare prairie with no money, and made good. I worked hard, but the experience was wonderful."

It has generally been conceded that farming is a man's job. It has long been considered that a woman's place on the farm was in the house, with a few attendant duties, looking after the chickens and the garden. But times are changing.

Demonstrative of the present feminine initiative, there are two young ladies farming extensively and with good profit too, in Western Canada. Some years ago a family located a 100-acre farm in the Oak Lake district, Manitoba. Later the father died, leaving his two daughters and aged wife a mortgaged quarter section. Instead of selling the effects and moving to town to take employment, the girls decided to work the place.

While the mother looked after the household duties the daughters did the farm work. They did the plowing, harrowing, seeding, haying, harvesting, stocking, feeding and other farm operations. Except at threshing time, the getting out of wood, the help of man was never sought. Instead of a 100-acre place, with seven horses and ten cattle, which they started with, they have a 1,120-acre farm, twenty-five head of heavy horses and nearly a hundred head of cattle, mostly pure-bred. Their farm buildings, equipment and well-kept fields would be objects of pride to the owners in any country.

Their accomplishment has not only been profitable but pleasant, and they have enjoyed every home advantage. They are two entertaining and bright girls, and have all the feminine charm of womanhood. Their manlike occupation has not given them a masculine character or appearance, as some of the older generations might imagine. Their gallant struggle for success signifies the truth in the oft-repeated maxim of Western Canada, "A little assistance and the soil, with its natural richness and God's sunshine will soon pay for the land itself."

If you wish to learn more of what Western Canada can do, write for a copy of "Canada West" which will be mailed to you free by your nearest Canadian government agent.—Advertisement.

Buttons Long in Use

John J. Jones, a waiter in the dining cars of the Pennsylvania railroad, asked the other day for a new set of brass buttons to use with his white duck coat. When he turned in his old buttons in exchange it was noticed that they were not only unpolished but also that much pushing and use had almost worn off the lettering and that the front of each button was actually worn through in one or more places. Asked how long he had worn the buttons, he replied: "About twenty-nine years." They had been issued to him in 1892 by Maj. J. F. Trout, then superintendent of dining cars and restaurants.—New York World.

Patriotic Soliditude.

"You have a great country," said the foreign visitor.

"We think so, of course," said the citizen.

"By the way, I'd like to see congress in session."

"My friend," said the citizen in great earnestness, "see Niagara falls, run out to Yellowstone park and the Grand canyon; inspect our huge industrial plants, our skyscrapers, our universities, but stay away from congress. I want you to go home still thinking we have a great country."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Christmas as a Name.

There are 25 persons whose name is Christmas in the present London directory. "Their callings," he says, "vary from a stained-glass artist to a furniture broker." There have been some quite notable people whose name was Christmas. A Mr. Christmas was master carver in the navy in the time of Charles I and evidently had great privileges, even to the extent of impressing men for service on the ships. Then there was a Henry Christmas. For some years lecturer at St. Peter's, Cornhill; and a Miss Jane Christmas, a well-known author and zealous Protestant propagandist in the middle of the Nineteenth century.

Changing Figures.

GETTING RESULTS

BY LEARNING things rather than words, observing closely how things are done to produce results, keeping in intimate touch with improved methods, making careful mental analysis of the failure or the success of others, and applying the practical information thus gained, ought to be the dominating purpose of every man or woman who earnestly desires to get out of and away from the packed and beaten roads.

To think along the same groove day after day and possibly using the same unproductive form of reasoning, grown threadbare by frequent handling, contracts the mind and weakens it.

If you do not go ahead among new thoughts, you can never hope to create new things.

If you fail to lay hold of the forces within you, and thus become a part

Uncommon Sense

By JOHN BLAKE

INSPIRATION

A RECENT Sunday newspaper printed a picture of the head of one of New York's biggest banks. He was in a baseball uniform, and but for a mustache—an ornament now discarded by ball players—looked like a professional.

The picture was taken at an outing of the Bond club. The banker served as pitcher for the New York team. The type below recited the fact that he got his first job in an Albany bank because he was a crack ball player, applied himself to banking as eagerly as he had applied himself to baseball, and in a few years was well on his way to his present position.

It is needless to say that this particular baseball player didn't put all he had into the game. He was unusually gifted as a pitcher, and might easily have got into one of the big leagues, too.

But he had the good sense to know that baseball was not a steady business, and that banking was. And instead of seizing an opportunity to make fairly big money early in youth, he was content to try the banking business on a small salary.

Of course there are a good many men who started in the banking business when he did, and who are still about where they were when they started. But at least they still have steady jobs. If they had taken to baseball they would not be doing as well.

Our object in referring to this particular case is to call attention to the fact that if you want inspiration in your work you can get it in the newspapers—plenty of it.

Brief bits of biography such as the one we have cited appear almost every day.

Seldom is a prominent man's name mentioned in connection with an important affair that you do not learn something about how he started and why he succeeded.

If you want to read about the failures—and the horrible examples, you can read about them, too.

While this man was rising from a bank clerk to a bank president, another man who started as an impor-

THE ROMANCE OF WORDS

"ELECTRICITY"

IN SEEKING the derivation of this word, one might be pardoned for supposing that it had something to do with the ancient word for lightning or even for steel or iron, because these substances have become connected in our minds with the substance itself.

It is better to fall in an untried effort than painstakingly to avoid it, for by exerting yourself you may quite unexpectedly arouse some dormant capability of whose existence you had not the slightest suspicion.

Life is a search for substance on which life depends. It is through this search that we discover things and get from them useful results.

To take no part in this ever-expanding search is to admit defeat.

You cannot long continue in the chase of honor and fame without soon feeling the exhilarating thrill of the ennobling adventure.

And when your blood runs hot your brain flashes with clearing vision, and your whole being becomes attuned to novel surroundings, you stretch out eager arms and cry in joyous voice for more, more!

And the beautiful part of such experience is that what in your days of slackness you considered drudgery barren of results, resolves itself into a thing of inspiration, bearing you on strong, swift wings to the top of your dreamland hill.

tant official of a bank—chiefly because his father owned most of it—was preparing to travel in the other direction. He made the journey, and has just arrived at the point he started for.

All human history is epitomized in the daily news. Read the papers. Think about what you read. After that if you don't succeed, it will not be because nobody told you how.

THE REASON

I OFTEN get a piece of pie, Or bread, or even cake, That's equal to the very best That mother used to bake.

And mother was a famous cook Known all the country through For putting up the best of meals That hungry children knew.

I used to think that modern cooks Had lost the noble art, But after long reflection I Espouse their cause and part.

So when some grouchy man complains And calls their art in question, I know just what the matter is— It's simply indigestion.

Systematic Accumulation.

"How did prices get to be so high in the first place?" inquired the plain citizen.

"Well," replied Mr. Dustin Stax, "the more profit you made the more surtax you had to pay and the more surtax you had to pay the more profit you had to make."

HAD TO STAY IN BED FOR WEEKS

Omaha Citizen Says He is Now Rid of Troubles That Had Kept Him Miserable for Years.

"I was almost out of commission when I began taking Tanlac, but it has made me feel like a new man in a short time," said W. S. Meadville, 7604 North Twenty-ninth St., Omaha, Neb.

"My liver and kidneys were out of order and I had terrible pains in my back and sides and was so bad off I often had to stay in bed for two weeks at a time.

"The results I got from Tanlac were a very glad surprise to me. It benefited me in every way and I believe the improvement I received will prove lasting and I feel stronger and better than in many a day."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists.

Foxy Old Boy.

"And you are ninety-five years old!" she exclaimed. "How wonderful! You look so well, so strong, so young. How have you managed to do it?"

"My method is very simple," the venerable gentleman replied. "I have never let any of my friends know it. If I didn't happen to be feeling well, consequently I've never had to take any of the things they would have recommended if they had known I was ailing."

Foolish and Untimely. "Mary," said Mrs. Gadder to her maid, "who was that man at the door just now?"

"I don't know, ma'am, whether he was an agent or a preacher. He said he had a message for you from the hereafter and wanted to know if you were thinking about your immortal soul."

"Dear me," exclaimed Mrs. Gadder. "What a foolish question to ask a woman who is packing her trunks for a trip to Palm Beach!"—Birmingham Age-Herald.

MADE WISE CHOICE OF WIFE

John Brown's Helpmate Apparently Ideal Woman for a Man of His Stern Disposition.

John Brown, whose body later on lay "moldering in the grave," once described the lady who afterwards became his wife as a "remarkably plain but neat, industrious and economical girl."

These latter virtues seem to have atoned for her want of physical charm, for he and Dianthe Lusk were married when she was nineteen and he was only twenty.

Dianthe was a strong-minded woman, but she made John an excellent wife, and their twelve years of married life—terminated by her early death—were most happy. He was a man of decided and violent disposition, and his wife is said to have possessed the faculty of getting him to do as she wished and causing him to believe that it was his idea all along. She died in 1832, twelve years after their marriage and just after the birth of their seventh child.

Headlines.

Sir Philip Gibbs, the art connoisseur, recently told a group of Chicagoans about the editor of a small paper who had the village carpenter make type large enough to tell of a village scandal. "Great show we made yesterday," he told the publisher of the paper after it was all over. "Yes," said the publisher quietly, "but I always thought we'd save something like that for the second coming of the Lord."

Should Be More.

More Quality for Less Money

There never was a time when Goodyear Tires were so good as now.

They are bigger, heavier and stronger today than any earlier Goodyears ever were.

Yet Goodyear prices are lower now than ever.

Not even in those remembered days before the war did Goodyear Tires sell at such low prices as today.

Look at the figures listed below.

They represent an average decrease of more than 60% from Goodyear prices of 1910.

When you can get these better Goodyears at such prices, there is no question of the tire value at your command.

Your Goodyear Service Station Dealer will tell you that never in his experience as a tire dealer has he known the equal of this value. See him today.

NOT CHICK'S TIME TO DIE

Raider of Garden Seemingly Had as Many Lived as Has the Provincial Tammy.

My garden has flowers and fruits in it; my neighbor keeps chickens, but I do more than my share in keeping those hens plump. My son has an air-gun, and one evening recently a fowl foolishly met one of the shots half-way. We were anxious to dispose of her; we could not dream of eating her ourselves, so our neighbor on the other side promised to help us out by lifting the chicken after dark. That night we watched for his coming, and growing impatient, I started out to help. There was my neighbor quartering the ground without finding the bird; he had a flashlight and I a lantern.

Across the fence came the friendly inquiry, "Anything you are looking for?"

Like guilty conspirators we looked up to find the missing chicken safe in her arms. The hen evidently had recovered sufficiently to find her way home. We doused our glims and scuttled for beds.—Exchange.

TWO RICH PRINTER'S "BULLS"

Postmaster General Has Preserved Specimens of Work of the "Inspired Composer."

Postmaster General Work has two choice specimens of typographical errors which he keeps on his desk handy to show to the discriminating. Like most everybody else in the world, Doctor Work appreciates that sort of thing.

Both of these "bulls" occurred in connection with printed portraits of Doctor Work when he was appointed to the highest position in the postal service. One of them bears the title: "Dr. Herbert Work, physician to the pope. Was with the late pope in his last illness."

Evidently the inscriptions of the two photographs got mixed up, and nobody caught the error, on account of the title of doctor of both physicians.

The other sample was a picture of the postmaster general, and an inscription which should have read: "Colorado Man Appointed Postmaster General."

But it got in like this: "Colored Man Appointed Postmaster General."

In That Sense, Anyway. "Failure is sometimes the beginning of success," says a philosopher. At any rate, seeing one's finish is apt to give one a start.

Modest merit may be recognized, but it takes longer.

Here's Good Advice: Relieve Your Fatigue With Sleep. Avoid Stimulants

THERE is nothing in the world so reconstructive as sound, refreshing sleep. During sleep the system rids itself of the fatigue poisons that have accumulated during the day. The food elements are taken up by the various tissues that require rebuilding nutriment.

other elements found in both coffee and tea.

If you have an idea that coffee or tea drinking may be injurious to your health, why not stop it for a week or so, and drink delicious, fragrant Postum instead.

Postum is a rich, golden-brown, pure cereal beverage. It contains no harmful elements of any kind. You can drink Postum as many times a day as you or the children desire a grateful, refreshing beverage.

Your grocer sells both forms of Postum: Instant Postum (in tins) made instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages of larger bulk, for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared) made by boiling for fully 20 minutes.

CHAPTER XVI.

After that life took on a mysterious fragrance and beauty that made every hour of it an intoxication to the master and mistress of Crownlands. The fact that their secret was all their own was all the more enchanting. To the outside world, life went upon its usual smooth way. Mr. Carter would be in town tonight, Mr. Carter was detained at the office, Mr. Carter was chaperoning the young people, there were flowers for Mrs. Carter. That was all Bot- tomley and Pilgrim and Ward and Ni- na saw.

Set to Harriet and Richard the de- licious, secret game of hide-and-go-seek made everything else in the world in- significant. Harriet opened the boxes of flowers he sent her with a heart suf- focating with joy. Richard consented to be absent from the dinner table ever which she presided with an ag- ony of renunciation that almost made him feel ill. When he chanced one day to meet her with Nina, in a breezy, swarming summer restaurant, the sight of the slender figure thrilled him as he had never been thrilled by any woman he had ever known. He was to speak to her, to hear her voice! One day he bought her shoes; in the shop she looked at him for approval. He thought the shoes, low shoes with buckles, that showed the silk-clad an- kle, very suitable and pretty. He was thrown into sudden confusion when the shoe clerk turned to him with a murmured mention of the price.

Ten dollars? Richard fumbled for his purse. He had met her walking alone in the Avenue; he had said that she must get shoes. Hundreds of other men were presumably buying their wives shoes, up and down the bril- liant street. But Richard found the adventure shaking to the soul.

"They're lovely shoes," Harriet said, as she walked out into the sunshine. She told him that she was to meet Nina at his mother's at five. Richard, with sudden eagerness, wondered if she would spend the interval in hav- ing tea somewhere, but instead they went into a bookshop, and she carried a new book triumphantly away. "It's a frightful day in town," Harriet said, "and if we're a little early we may all get away to the country that much sooner!"

She established herself contentedly beside him when they did finally start for Crownlands. Ward, beside Han- sen, did most of the talking; Nina was silent, and Harriet noticed that she was very pale. Richard was repeat- ing to himself one phrase all the way; a phrase that he found so thrilling and absorbing that it was enough to keep him from speaking aloud, or lis- tening to what the others said. "I love her—I love her—I love her!" thought Richard. And sometimes he glanced sideways at her, her beautiful hair rippling in thick waves under the thin veil, her face a little pale from the heat of the day, her glorious eyes faintly shadowed. When the swift movement of the car brought her shoulder against his, their eyes met for a smiling second, and it seemed to Richard that his heart brimmed with the most delicious emotion that he had ever known.

Nina complained of a headache when they reached home, and went early to bed. Harriet, when she had tubbed and changed to an evening gown, glanced in at Nina, and thought the girl asleep. There were men guests for dinner, and afterward there was bridge. Harriet sat with Madame Carter for awhile, for the old lady had also dined upstairs, went about the house upon her usual errands, and, going to her own room, found Nina reading, at about ten o'clock. Nina did not look up or speak as Harriet came in.

The door that led to Richard's room was not only unlocked, but actually ajar. Harriet gave it a surprised glance, and spoke to Nina, in the next room.

"Nina, did you unlock this door?" "What door?" Nina called. "Oh, yes!" she added. "I did."

"Oh," Harriet murmured. And she stepped to the door, and looked into Richard's room.

It was a sort of upstairs sitting room, furnished simply, in man fashion, with deep leather chairs on each side of the fireplace, broad tables carrying only the essential lamps and ashtrays, a shabby desk where Rich- ard kept personal papers, and book- shelves crammed with novels. Har- riet, making a timid round, saw Bal- sac and Dickens, Dumas and Fielding, several Shakespeares and a complete Meredith, jostling elbows with modern novels in bright jackets, and yellow French romances losing their paper covers.

Suddenly her heart turned to water; some tiny sound in the silence warn- ing her that some one had entered. She turned, discovered here in the very center of his own private apart- ment. He was standing not three feet away from her. For a second they stared at each other with a sort of mutual trepidation.

"Hello!" he said; then matter-of- factly, "I brought home a paper to- night; I wanted Unger to see it! I left it in the suit I wore."

He stepped to the dressing room, and probed in a pocket, without mov- ing his pleasant look from her.

"Giving my room the once over?" he said.

ing to make her voice as natural as his own. Confused and ashamed, she was hardly conscious of what she said.

"Here we are!" Richard glanced at the paper he had found. "See here," he said, presently, going to a win- dow, "come here a minute, I want to show you this! You see, they were both looking out into the moonlight now, 'you see, this is where I propose to build on that big room downstairs, throw the library into the blue room, and have a big sleeping porch upstairs here,' he explained. 'Perfectly feasible, and yet it will make a different house of it!'"

Harriet commented interestedly enough. But she heard his voice rather than his words, and saw only the well-groomed, black-clad figure, the shining patent-leather shoes, the fine hand that indicated the changes.

Perhaps he was conscious of confu- sion, too, for his words stopped, and presently they were looking at each other in a strange silence, Richard still smiling, Harriet wide eyed.

Then suddenly his strong arms held her close, and her blue, frightened eyes were close to his, and she felt everything else in the world slip away from her except the exquisite knowl- edge that she loved this man with all her heart and soul.

"I want to tell you something," Richard said, quickly and incoherently. "I want you to know that I love you—I think I've always loved you! This wasn't in our bond, I know, but I think I couldn't have wanted you so without loving you! If—if the time comes, Harriet, when you can care for me, you'll tell me, won't you? That's all I want, just to know that you will tell me. You're going to tell me, your- self! I'm going to make you love me! I'll be patient—I'll not hurry you—but some day you'll have to tell me that I've—I've won you!"

He had spoken swiftly, almost sternly, with a sort of desperate determina- tion. Now he freed her arms as sud- denly as he had grasped them, and added, in a lower tone:

"Until that time I'll not—not even—kiss the top of your hair, Harriet," he said.

In the mad rushing of her senses she could not find the right word, but she detained him with an entreat- ing hand. Her eyes, shining with the glorious shame of a proud woman who gives herself. But Richard was not looking at the betraying eyes. In the great new love that had swept him from all his old moorings there was a deep humility. He only heard her say that she could never learn to love him. He bent his head over her finger tips, and kissed them, as he said quietly:

"Giving My Room the Once Over?" He Said.

"But I'm going to try to make you, just the same!"

Then he was gone, and Harriet was standing alone in the softly lighted room. For a few moments she re- mained perfectly still, with her white hands pressed to her burning cheeks. Then, shaken with joy and surprise, with a delicious terror and something of a child's innocent chagrin, she went noiselessly back to her own room, closed the communicating door, and undressed with pauses for the dreams that would come creeping over body and soul, and hold her in their exquisite stillness for long min- utes together.

She was brushing her hair when Nina suddenly appeared, and came listlessly in to sit on the edge of Harriet's bed.

"I want to ask you something!" Nina said, in an odd voice. "And, Harriet, I want you to tell me the truth!"

Harriet, turning, faced her between two curtains of rippling gold. She saw a new Nina, a subdued, thought- ful, serious woman in the old con- fident, Nina's place.

"But first I ought to tell you that I wasn't with Amy today!" Nina said

"Oh, Nina! Must we begin that sort of thing? Harriet reproached her. But she was puzzled by Nina's man- ner. "Back to school-girl tricks!" she said.

"Never back to a school-girl," Nina said, passionately. "I'll never be that again. Harriet," she went on, "I've written Royal three times, since my birthday, and I've seen him twice."

"You saw him today?" Harriet ven- tured.

"I went there this afternoon," Nina admitted, heavily. Then suddenly, "Harriet, did my father pay him—did he take money—to break our engage- ment?"

"Nina, what a horrible thought! Of course not!" Harriet could fortunatel- y answer in perfect honesty.

"Oh, Harriet," the girl caught her hands, turning sick and imploring eyes toward her, "are you sure?"

"Nina, dear, your father would have told me!"

"He might not—he might not!" Nina said, feverishly. "But if he did—!" she whispered, half to herself. "That's Pilgrim, I rang for her," she said, of a knock on her own door. "Ask my father to come up, will you?" she said to the maid, when Pilgrim appeared.

"We'll settle it now!"

"Mr. Carter is just coming up," Pil- grim said. And a moment later Rich- ard, with an interested face, came through Nina's room, and joined them. Harriet had had time only to knot her hair back carelessly, and slip into the most formal of her big Chinese coats.

"Father," Nina said, when they three were alone together, "did Royal Blon- din take a check from you ten days ago?"

Richard, taken unaware, glanced sharply at Harriet, who shook her head, with an anxious look. He sat down beside Nina on the bed, and put a fatherly arm about her.

"Ah, Father, don't put me off!" the girl begged. "I wrote him, after my birthday," she said, "and told him that money made no difference to me. He didn't answer. Then I got Bruce Hopper to ask his mother to have Blondin meet her at the club for tea, and I saw him then. Bruce," Nina cast in, still in the new, self-contained tone, "has been wonderful about it! I know he only seems a silent sort of boy, but I'll never forget what he's done for me! Royal," she resumed, "didn't want to see me, and said he had promised Father that it was over. He—but I needn't tell you all he said. It sounded—so—so false!" she whis- pered, bitterly. "So I went to his studio to- day," she presently continued. "And—there were two or three women there, but it wasn't that. They were—well, perhaps they were just hav- ing fun. But—" And Nina looked pitifully from Harriet's sympathetic face to her father's troubled eyes. "But I've not been having much fun!" she faltered, with a suddenly trembling mouth. "I've been planning—pray- ing—that somehow it would come out right. He told me today that he had promised not to see or speak to me for two years," she said, slowly. "—Father, I knew that he had a reason! He was changed. I never saw him so! And two hours ago," she pointed to the door that led into her father's room, "two hours ago I went in there," she said, "and I looked over your own check book. Father, did you write him a check? Was that the stub that had 'R. B.' on it?"

Richard looked at her sorrowfully.

"I'm sorry, Nina," he said, simply. "I told him you should not know, from me! I would have spared you that."

For a few minutes there was silence in the room. Then Nina said bravely, through tears:

"I don't know why you should be sorry for what will save me months of slow worry, all at one blow! You and Harriet needn't worry any more. I'm cured. I've been a fool, let him flatter me and lie to me," said this new Nina, with bitter courage. "but I'm over it now. I'm sorry I gave you much trouble, Father—"

"My darling girl," her father said, tenderly. "I only wish I could spare you all this!"

"Better now than two or three years after we were married," Nina said. "Plenty of girls find it out then! Fa- ther, I want you to get that check, through the clearing-house, for me," she said, herocally, "and I want to keep it. If ever I'm a fool about a man again, I'll take it out and look at it!"

"I have it; I told Fox to get it to- day," Richard said. "You shall have it!"

Nina had turned suddenly white; it was as if a last little hope had been killed.

"You have it!" she whispered. "He cashed it, then!"

"He cashed it the next morning," Richard said. Nina was silent for a moment.

"How you must laugh at me, Har- riet!" she said then.

"I? Laugh at you?" Harriet said, stricken. "My darling girl, I am the last woman in the world who could do that! I was only your age, Nina, when I met him—you know that story. Why, Nina, you're but eighteen, after all; you'll have many and many an affair before the right man comes along."

Harriet said, "You'll look back on this some day, and say, 'It was an experi- ence, and I learned from it! It is only going to make me happier and more sure when the man whom I really love comes to me!'"

Nina, sitting between Richard and Harriet on the bed, looked wistfully from one face to another.

"I'll try to make it so, Harriet!" she said. And somewhat timidly she added, "Father—and Harriet—shall you feel dreadfully if I say that I don't want to go to Brazil? I'll tell you why. Ward is going out to the Gard- ner ranch, and Bruce is going, too, and it seems to me that riding and camp- ing and living in the open air will be—well, will seem better to me than just being on the steamer! I dread seeing strange places and meeting people," said Nina. "The Gardner girls were simply darling to me the term they were in school, and—don't you remem- ber, Harriet?—we were the only people who took them out for Christmas and Easter holidays, and they like me! And—if you wouldn't be too disap- pointed, Harriet, I believe I would like it better!"

warmly, "You must do what seems right to you. But you won't need me!" she added, tactfully.

"Well, you see Mrs. Gardner and Mrs. Hopper are sisters," Nina ex- plained, readily, "and they'll be with us. But if you'd like to come—we are going camping in the most glorious canyon that you ever saw!" Nina in- terrupted herself with sudden enthu- siasm. "And I am so glad I really can ride! I'd feel so horrible if I couldn't!"

"I think you'll have a wonderful two months of it," Harriet said, "and then Granny'll be coming West, to spend the winter in Santa Barbara, too! And now, Nina love, it's after eleven o'clock," she ended with a change of tone, "and you have had a terrible day! We will have to do some more shopping tomorrow afternoon, and try on the riding habits, and do a thousand things. And, Nina," Richard heard her add tenderly, when his daughter had given him a rather sober good-night kiss at the door of her room, "when- ever you feel sad and depressed about it, just remember to say to yourself, 'This won't last! In a few months the sting will all be gone!'"

"Nina is in safe hands!" Richard said to himself, thankfully, as he closed the door. He carried a memory her joyous voice following Maria away.

Richard pushed back his plate and looked irresolutely after her. Then suddenly he rose and walked through the pantry, asking two startled maids for Mrs. Carter. Beulah had been sev- eral years in the house without ever seeing "him" in this neighborhood be- fore.

Richard crossed a sunshiny brick- walled yard, where linen was drying, and went through a brick gateway that gave on a neglected little lane. The lane had once been the driveway for a carriage and a prancing pair, but there were only riding horses at Crownlands now, and three of these were looking over the wall at the grass-grown road. And Richard found Harriet here.

She was on her knees, in the pleas- ant green shadow of the old sycamores and maples; her back was toward him. She was looking up into the face of the old stableman, Trotter, who stood before her, his crooked, dwarfed old figure still further bent, as he held two strong young ewes by their thick, woolly shoulders.

As Trotter gave him a respectful good morning, Harriet sprang to her feet and whirled about and Richard saw the woolly stiff legs of a very young lamb dangling from her arms and the lamb's meek little black-ruf- faced face close to the beautiful face he loved.

"Oh, Richard!" she said, carried away by her own delight. "Look at it! Isn't it the sweetest darling baby that ever was! Oh, you sweet!" she said, putting her lips to the little wool- ly head.

"You are!" Richard said quite with- out premeditation.

Harriet laughed, surrendered the little lamb to Trotter and followed the old man's departure to the stables with an anxious warning.

"They're to have this little enclo- sure all to themselves," she explained to Richard when they were alone. "He's going to build them a little shed." And as Richard, his back lean- ing against the low brick wall, made no immediate attempt to move, she looked at him expectantly. "Shall we go back?" she suggested.

"That sounded very pleasant to me," Richard said with deliberate irresolu- tion.

Harriet looked at him in puzzled silence.

"I mean your calling me Richard," he said.

She flushed brightly and laughed.

"Did I? I always think of you as Richard!" she explained.

"So you abandon me on the Brazil trip?" he asked, watching her seri- ously.

"Well—" Harriet shrugged. "I thought you had to go," she added. "I'm—I'll confess I'm disappointed. But to have Nina want to do anything is such a relief to me that I'm only going to think of that!"

"Yes, I have to go," Richard said slowly. "I must be there for a month at least. But I'm disappointed, too. I got thinking of it, in the night—I couldn't sleep! I'm disappointed, too."

He fell silent. "I wish," he said besit- tingly, "that you had not told me that you—you don't feel that you—are going to love me!" he said. "I love you with all my heart and soul. It—well, it's all I think of now. I want—"

He turned and picking an ivy leaf from the wall looked at it intently for a moment and tore it apart before he let it fall. "However," he said philo- sophically, smiling at her, "we'll let that wait!"

Harriet, close to him, laid one hand upon his shoulder.

"You misunderstood me," she said steadily. "What I said was that I could not love you more than I do! Aren't you ever going to under- stand?"

For a long minute they looked into each other's eyes.

"Harriet, do you mean it?" Richard said then, simply.

"Yes," she answered. "I mean it! I've always meant it. I've always loved you, I think. No man could want any woman to love him more!"

The blue eyes so near his own were misty with sudden tears. In the des- erted little lane, in the blue summer morning and the green shade of the sycamores, they were alone. Richard put his arms about her.

And for a moment he held all the beauty and fragrance and laughter and tears that was Harriet close to his heart; the soft hair tumbled, the brown, firm young hand resting on his shoulder, the warm cheek against his own.

A breeze rustled through the branches high above them; the blue river, beyond the brick wall, flowed on in an even sheet of satin; two birds looped the enclosure in a sudden twittering flight; and from the stable region came the pias- tive bleating of a mother sheep. But to Harriet and Richard the world was all their own.

"My wife!" said Richard Carter. (THE END.)

"And, Harriet, I Want You to Tell Me the Truth!"

of Harriet's earnest eyes, her low, eager voice, her encouraging arm about Nina's shoulders.

They were all at breakfast when he came down the next morning. His mother, in one of her lacy, flowing robes she always wore before noon, laid down a letter half-read, to smile at him. Ward, his dark head very sleek above his informal summer costume, was deep in talk with Bruce Hopper, who had evidently ridden over from the country club, and was in a well-fitting, shabby jersey that became his somewhat lanky frame. Nina, somewhat silent, but interested in ev- erything, wore an expression of quiet self-possession that her father found touching. Nina was growing up, he thought.

Completing the group, and officiat- ing at the foot of the table, was the radiant Harriet. She looked as fresh as one of the creamy rosebuds that were massed in the dull blue bowl be- fore her, her shining hair framing the dusky forehead like dull gold wings, the frail sleeves of her blue gown fall- ing back from her rounded arm.

"You're late, my son," said Madame Carter, as he kissed her temple.

"Never mind," Harriet said serenely. "I've just this instant come, and he saves my face! Do turn that toast, Ward!" she added. And to the maid, "Mr. Carter's fruit, Mollie, please."

Breakfast was the least formal of all the informal meals at Crownlands. Bottomley was never in evidence until the late luncheon; mail and newspa- pers, and the morning gaiety of the young people all made for cheerful dis- order.

"If you're going into town at ten, Father, we'll go, too," Nina suggested.

"But I can't," she was heard to mur- mur in an undertone to the disappoint- ed Bruce. "I have to get clothes, don't I?"

"These clothes are for the ranch," Nina said, smiling. Both her father and Harriet augured well from the youth's instantly transformed face.

"Say—honestly?" he asked, impetu- ously, with an irrepressible grin.

"I think so," Nina murmured. The rest of their conversation was inaudible; they presently wandered forth to finish it on the tennis court. Ward followed his grandmother upstairs, and Harriet and Richard were left to finish their breakfast alone.

"You look tired," Harriet said, ring- ing, when his omelette came in, and pausing beside the head of the table for an instant on her way to the pantry.

"I had a bad night," Richard ad- mitted. "But that's not all you're go- ing to have for breakfast?" he pro- tested.

"I never have more!" Harriet smiled. "I'm sorry about the bad night," said she.

"I couldn't help thinking—" Rich- ard began. "What is it, Mollie?" he added, harshly, to the hovering maid.

"Nothing—no matter—sir," Mollie stammered, retreating. "It was just that the man about the sheep came sir—" she faltered.

"The sheep?" Richard echoed, frowning. Harriet laughed gayly.

"Oh, yes!" she said. "I told you I had ordered two or three young sheep," she explained, "to keep our lawns cropped. They look so ador- able, and they do it so nicely! Has he got them, Mollie?" she added, eagerly. "Oh, I must see them! I'll be back in exactly five minutes, Mr. Carter," she said.

"What are we supposed to do with them in winter?" Richard asked, smil- ing.

"Oh, they will have a little—a little byre!" she answered, readily. "You'll see!" she said. "And be beam-

NERVOUSNESS EX

HOUSE FOR SUNNY SUMMER; LONG WRAPS FOR SPRING

LITTLE journey through the blouse shops leaves the impression of a riot of styles, and it is respectfully suggested that the displays would be less confusing if the several styles of blouses were segregated in time. The styles are broadly divided into costume blouses, tailored blouses and sports blouses, each one showing its ingenious variations.

The two blouses pictured here belong to the dressier class of suits and are made of crepe de chine. Blouses of this fabric and georgette, in demand, with white, flesh and they achieve cape effects by their draperies or their sleeves are so amplified that they contrive the flowing lines of the cape. There is nothing monotonous in the mode; with all its preference for capelike lines, it has fostered very great variety of graceful wraps that keep the streets interesting.

The most important rival of the cape appears in long, full garments, bloused below the waistline, like the model shown at the left of the picture. In this wrap the sleeves are extended into long points finished into

PLAN TO SELECT GARMENTS THAT ARE MOST SUITABLE FOR WOMEN

Figure on left is garbed in simple blouse and skirt. These may be adapted to any figure and with slight changes in sleeve, collar and fullness of skirt are always in good style. The design in the middle is for a tall, slender woman; the costume is divided into three distinct parts to lessen the apparent height, and horizontal tucks are used to suggest width. The design on the right is for the stout woman; the long straight lines suggest height and the surplice front and curve of the side panel tend to decrease the apparent breadth of the figure.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Women's clothing requires more careful thought than that for men and children. The intermediate type of figure is not difficult to clothe attractively, but the more extreme types, the slender and the stout, need careful attention. Once a woman has decided on the type of design which suits her best, she should choose clothing which in general lines is always the same. Monotony can be avoided by using different materials and trimmings. Such garments may usually be kept in good style by slight changes in sleeves, collar and fullness of the skirt.

For very tall, slight people, designs should be chosen that suggest roundness and normal height. Soft, full blouses, full skirts, and draped effects are good; if the height seems too great, horizontal lines brought into the costume by means of flounces, bands and tucks will tend to reduce it. Plaids and figured materials with large areas of design are admissible on a slight, tall figure; also soft, deep-pile stuffs for coats, and bright, shiny, lustrous materials are good.

Design for Stout Figures. For the stout figure, designs could be chosen that suggest height and slenderness. Loose, easy-fitting garments with straight, unbroken lines suggest height. Lines that carry the eye to the center of the figure will diminish its breadth. No lines should carry directly across the figure, for they seem to lessen the height and increase the breadth of the figure. Separate waists and skirts, unless the waist is so adjusted as to fall over the skirt, will tend to broaden the figure and diminish the height. A surplice line for the opening of the waist is good; narrow girdles draped loosely about the figure, crossed in the back and brought to the front again with one end looped over the other, suggest height.

The stout woman should choose soft, nonlustrous materials, such as crepe de chine, crepe georgette, serge, gabardine, voile and batiste. Plaids and large-figured materials are out of the question and stripes should be cautiously chosen. Colors should be avoided that make the lines of the figure stand out prominently, clothing experts in the United States Department of Agriculture affirm in a recent bulletin on selection and care of clothing. Taupe, gray and dark blue are usually best in this respect, but all dull, dark colors are safer than light or bright ones.

Suit Colors to Wear. Colors should be carefully chosen not only in relation to the figure but in reference to the complexion, color of the hair and eyes of the wearer as well. There is no general rule by which one can choose becoming colors. Therefore, one must rely on one's own taste, judgment and experience. In general, women with fresh, clear complexions find a greater range of becoming colors than others who have little color, but patient experimentation will discover those which are becoming to either type. It is safe to choose such colors as are in harmony with the color of the eyes, hair and complexion.

Dark blue is a universally becoming color. Taupe, dark blue, black and gray in which violet predominates are good colors to be used by the woman who is stout. Bright aggressive colors make the stout figure seem larger. Bright gay colors may be chosen for the young, slight girl figure, but always with a thought to the general coloring.

SURVEY SHOWS DIFFERENCE IN COST OF TRACTOR AND HORSES

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The cost of power on tractor farms in the winter wheat belt is somewhat greater than when horses are used for all the work, according to the results of a survey by the United States Department of Agriculture. A preliminary report just issued shows, however, that three-fourths of the tractor owners were of the opinion that their tractors were proving profitable.

This survey shows differences in the cost of power and labor due to the use of tractors, the work done with them, and the cost per acre for different operations both with horses and tractors. Some 354 tractor owners in northern Oklahoma, Kansas and southern Nebraska were visited and a complete record of all work done with tractors and horses during the year was obtained, together with statements concerning the advantages and disadvantages of using tractors. The farms averaged about 500 acres in size, on which $52 acre of crops were grown in 1921, nearly three-fourths of the crop area being in wheat.

Effect of Use of Tractors on Power Costs.

There was a net increase of $206 per farm in the combined cost of power and labor due to the use of the tractor, after deducting the cost of keeping the work stock which had been displaced and the value of the family and hired labor saved.

Had all the surplus horses been sold there would have been a further reduction of about $115 per farm in the cost of horse labor. On many of the farms there had been a reduction of feed for work stock due to the use of the tractor, and if this had been taken into account a further saving of about $47 per farm would have been shown.

The analysis of the cost per acre of power and man labor for different operations when done with tractors and horses gave the following averages:

Plowing spring and fall with tractors	1.99 per acre
Plowing spring and fall with horses	1.88 per acre
Listing with tractors	1.10 per acre
Listing with horses	1.03 per acre
Disking (tandem disk) with tractors	.91 per acre
Disking (tandem disk) with horses	1.06 per acre
Drilling with tractors	.58 per acre
Drilling with horses	.52 per acre
Drawing binder with tractors	.37 per acre
Drawing binder with horses	.56 per acre

Cost of Power on Horse Farms.

A group of 83 farms where tractors were not owned, but comparable in size to those where tractors were used, were surveyed in order to obtain a direct comparison between costs on farms where tractors are owned and costs on farms of similar size and type where tractors are not owned. There was an average of 10.5 head of work stock on these farms, of which 10.1 head were needed for the work. One horse was needed for each 33 crop acres while the tractor owners were keeping one for each 42 crop acres and needed, in addition to their tractors, only one for each 54 crop acres.

The cost per head of keeping the work stock was $65 per year where tractors were not owned and $64 where they were owned. The horses worked 482 hours per head on the tractor farms and 624 hours on the other farms. The cost per farm of Tractor Used for Disking.

Tractors were used for plowing, listing, diskage, and drawing binder. The cost per acre for these operations was generally lower when done with tractors compared to horses.

The cost of using tractors for drawbar work on these farms averaged $484 for the year, or $1.00 per hour. These farmers were keeping an average of 8.3 head of work stock in addition to their tractors and the cost per farm of keeping the work stock for the year was $641. Thus the total annual cost of power for drawbar work was $1,025. The tractors furnished the power for 40 per cent of the drawbar work.

Variations in Cost of Power. There were great variations in the practices and costs on individual farms and the results indicate that often the cost of using the tractors and keeping the work stock was ex-ensive for the amount of work done. Many tractor owners have not determined exactly what work they can use their tractors for most profitably and what should be done with horses.

The average cost per crop acre was $3.57 per year for drawbar power for all the farms. This cost ranged from $2.21 as the average for the fourth of the farms with lowest costs to $4.76 for the fourth of the farms with highest costs.

The tractors had been in use for 23 months on an average and the first cost had been $1,479, about one-third higher than the present price of tractors of the same size and type. During the year covered by the investigation the cost of fuel and oil was also somewhat higher than at present. On account of these lower prices it is estimated that the present cost of operating tractors purchased at current prices would be something like 25 per cent below the 1921 cost on these farms.

Tractors Reduce Horses and Labor.

The effect of the addition of the tractor to the farm equipment was shown in changes recorded after the purchase of the tractor. On an average, these farms had been increased by 50 crop acres and there had been power for drawbar work where tractors were not used was $701 as compared with $1,025 where both tractors and horses were used.

What Farmers Think of Tractors.

The owners' opinions regarding the use of tractors showed that 75 per cent of the farmers interviewed believed that their tractors would be profitable investments, and 72 per cent of them intended to buy others when needed. The principal advantages mentioned were the ability to do more work in a given time, and the saving of horses in hot weather. Among the disadvantages, the first cost and depreciation and the running expenses were mentioned most frequently. The tractor was used as the primary source of power for field work by 59 per cent of the owners, while 41 per cent used the tractors as supplementary to horses. In 21 per cent of the cases the tractor owners believed that the tractors had been responsible for some increased yield per acre.

BARLEY USED FOR FEEDING SWINE

Its Use for Brewing Purposes Has Fallen Off.

Department of Agriculture Takes Up Problem of Finding Relative Value of Light and Heavy Grades—It Is Cheap Crop.

Barley as a hog feed is coming on the markets in increasing amounts, probably for the reasons that its use for brewing purposes has fallen off and the hog industry has been moving into the barley-producing districts. The United States Department of Agriculture has taken up the problem of finding out the relative feeding value of light and heavy barley. There are no federal standards for this grain, but light and heavy grades are recognized on the market.

The trials will be repeated. Not enough data are available yet for definite conclusions as to the relative merits of the light and heavy grain, but the results have shown that high-class barley has a feeding value only slightly lower than good shelled corn. When these tests are completed the department will have additional information on the methods of feeding barley, whether or not it should be fed whole, rolled, dry or soaked.

It Pays to Fertilize.

Pastures should be systematically fed, ermanent pastures may be expected to decline in carrying capacity if not fertilized. A dressing of stable manure is valuable.

Pasture for Stock.

Sweet clover makes an excellent pasture for all classes of live stock. It may be seeded on a June grass sod in early spring with fair results, provided the soil is not acid.

During 1921, the department made feeding tests of the two grades, and regue color the favorites, but they are made in many other colors, and are also worn with the dressier separate skirts. At the left a slip-over model is gathered in at the round neck and opens a little way down the front, fastening with ribbon ties. Its decorative panels may be of figured crepe or of embroidery and it has a girlish fluff of material, tied at the left side.

Another pretty slip-over style opens at the left side and fastens on the shoulder. It is of white, or light-colored crepe de chine, with bindings and covered buttons in a darker colored crepe. It has ingeniously situated pockets in which a panel of the dress crepe is used, and its narrow ruffle ties in a prim bow at the back.

On the dressier blouses of crepe de chine beading is still much used, crystal beads in the color of the blouse and handsome tassels and they lend the admired sweeping lines to this coat. Any of the soft, lightweight coatings are used in these wraps and their linings of crepe or other silks are especially supple. It has a muffler collar which adapts it to cool weather.

The very handsome black wrap at the right of the picture is made of one of those lustrous silk crepes which grow more important as summer draws near. It is shirred to a full ruffled collar and has a narrow scarf to match finished with fringe for tying at the front. Fringes and tassels are important in summer wraps. Wide fringe adds much to the richness and beauty of the model illustrated, placed across each side near its lower edge.

Many summer wraps have fur collars and sometimes are banded with fur, with caracul, in beige tones or

BREAKFAST CEREALS ARE EASILY COOKED

Old-Fashioned Methods Are Now Less Common.

Cornmeal Mush is One of Dishes Early New England Settlers Copied From Indian Neighbors—Pop Corn is Relished.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.) In early times there were many ways of preparing grains and meal, such as frumenty and the good King Arthur's famous "bag pudding." The partly cooked and ready-to-eat cereals have become so popular in recent years that the old-fashioned methods of cooking grains are now less common. The ingenious housekeeper can, however, vary her breakfast cereals by the use of simple meals or grains, say food specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture.

One of the dishes which the early New England settlers probably copied from their Indian neighbors is the homely corn-meal mush, or hasty pudding. This is made of boiling ordinary cornmeal in milk or water. If properly cooked, it is a nutritious and economical dish and has the advantage—dear to the thrifty housewife—that the left-over portion will be reheated if cut in slices and fried.

Another popular way of using certain varieties of corn is as pop corn. This cannot be strictly termed a breakfast food, but it is frequently eaten with milk, like other cereal preparations.

If the task of cooking must be considered, and strict economy is necessary, crackers in milk may be substituted for the ready-cooked breakfast cereals. Crackers are similar to regular breakfast foods in composition, and at average prices furnish more nourishment for the same amount of money. Nor should it be forgotten that as a rational, palatable, and economical dish, bread and milk ranks high.

Six Corn Gems.

Scant one-half cup sugar, place butter half size of an egg, creamed. Add one egg, one-half cup milk, good one-half cup white flour, one and one-half teaspoons baking powder, three-quarters cup cornmeal, or enough to make batter stiffer than cake batter.

Drying Stockings Quickly.

If the stockings taken off at night are needed next morning, wash them at night, crumple up newspapers into balls and push them into the stockings. They will dry much more quickly.

USING STALE BREAD

There need be no waste of stale bread. For bread that is not allowed to become moldy may be used in a variety of ways, discarding only the brown crusts and these are sometimes dried, crushed and used in griddle cakes. Small bits of leftover bread, slices that have become too dry for use as toast, croutons and such like, should be dried in the warming oven, covered with a piece of cheese-cloth to protect them from dust, then passed through a meat chopper and sifted. The fine crumbs are used for crumbling croquettes, cutlets, etc., and the coarse crumbs for the top of an oatmeal dish. Such crumbs should be stored in glass jars and they will keep a long time if placed in a cool dry place.

or iridescent beads that shade into it, replacing the varied and contrasting colors that preceded them. They are put on in simple designs, as in straight lines at intervals down the length of the blouse, or in small sunburst patterns that any one can do. A very pretty slip-over blouse in periwinkle blue, is made of one length of crepe de chine, cut in very deep, narrow scallops at the bottom. The edges of these, the neck and sleeves, are outlined with long, iridescent beads in blue shading into purple, and lines of beads extend from the neck to the scallops which extend about eight inches below the waist line.

black, and natural squirrel the favorites. Those who keep their fingers on the pulse of public demand see in the long bloused coats, on Russian lines, the most hopeful rivals of capes and cape-wraps. Quite likely they will force ahead, and perhaps get the lead by the time that fall styles make their entry. In the meantime the vogue of the cape, and all its kindred, is assured. The new three-piece suits provided with capes instead of coats, are pretty and economical because the capes may be worn with other dresses during the summer months.

"After you, my dear cape," appears to be the sentiment one gathers from coats as they appear in the procession of spring styles—and they are very closely "after." Either a cape is a part of their makeup or
